"The law is progressive and expansive, adapting itself to the new relations and interests which are constantly springing up in the progress of society. But this progress must be by analogy to what is already settled."

EXPLANATION

THE object in view in preparing Corpus Juris Secundum has been twofold: First, to provide a complete encyclopedic treatment of the whole body of the law, which means that it must be based upon all the reported cases; Second, to present each title of the law in form and content most suitable as a means of practical reference for the Bench and Bar.

Corpus Juris Secundum is therefore a complete restatement of the entire body of American Law. The clear-cut and exhaustive propositions comprising the text are supported by all the authorities from the earliest times to date. The supporting case citations, conspicuously set out in the notes, point to all decisions handed down since the publication of Corpus Juris. When the searcher may wish to consult earlier authorities, a specific reference to Corpus Juris makes available all cases back to 1658.

Each title is preceded by a complete section analysis, greatly simplified to facilitate research. Where the scope of any section is such as to require it, a more minute analysis is found thereunder in its appropriate place within the title (see Abatement and Revival, Section 112). The convenience of this method—an innovation in encyclopedic writing—must immediately commend itself.

A concise black-letter summary, indicative of its scope, precedes the full treatment or statement of the law under each section. These introductory summaries, concise and free from interlineation of authorities, have proven of great convenience and value in legal research.

An index is found in the back of each volume covering the titles contained therein, thus providing another convenient means of ready access to the text and notes.

Corpus Juris Secundum is kept to date by means of annual cumulative pocket parts for each volume. This feature of supplementation which has proved so successful in modern digests and statutes conveniently, and with certainty, keeps each title constantly to date through current cases and new precedents.

Corpus Juris Secundum represents the combined product of the highest editorial talent and manufacturing skill. Its many excellent editorial features are fittingly accompanied by corresponding innovations and improvements in mechanical arrangement, typography, and design, which the publisher believes will commend themselves to the profession as representing a new standard in legal publications.

While the meaning of the term "court" will vary with the context in which it is used,¹ generally speaking a court is a body in the government to which the public administration of justice is delegated,² being a tribunal officially assembled under authority of law, at the appropriate time and place, for the administration of justice,³ through which the state enforces its sovereign rights and powers,⁴ and consisting in its jurisdiction and functions and not its title or name,⁵ although in cases where the character of a court as created is inconclusive the legislative label or name given it may be a determining factor in ascertaining its character.⁶ A court has also been defined as a place where justice is judicially administered.⁷ Other definitions embodying the same ideas in different phraseology are to be found in the cases.⁸ The singular "court" may be construed as including the plural "courts."⁹

Elements and constituent parts. Time, place, and an authorized officer are essential constituents of the organization of a court; that is to say, in order to constitute a court a duly authorized officer must be present at the time and place appointed by law.¹⁰ In every court there must be at least three constituent parts: the actor, reus, and iudex; the actor, or plaintiff, who complains of an injury done; the reus, or defendant, who is called upon to make satisfaction for it; and the iudex, or judicial power which is to examine the truth of the fact, to determine the law arising upon that fact, and if any injury appears to be done, to ascertain and by its officers to apply the remedy.¹¹

"Judge" and "court" as convertible terms. The words "judge" and "court" are frequently used as convertible terms,¹² but they are not strictly synonymous,¹³ and a judge alone does not necessarily constitute a court,¹⁴ and has been described as merely an officer or member of the court,¹⁵ for, while the judge is an indispensable part,¹⁶ he is only a part¹⁷ of the court.

"Term" and "session." The word "term" has been construed as meaning a court,¹⁸ although there

An assemblage of the proper officers of a court at the proper place, but at a time not authorized by law, does not constitute a "court," and any judicial proceedings then had, which under the law can be had only in term time, are null and void.—Ex parte Massengale, Okl.Cr., 93 P. 2d 41.

§ 2. Courts of General and Courts of Special Jurisdiction

Courts of general jurisdiction are those competent to decide their own jurisdiction and to take cognizance of all causes, civil and criminal, of a particular nature, while courts of special jurisdiction are those incompetent to decide their own jurisdiction and taking cognizance only of a few specified matters.

Courts of general jurisdiction are courts which take cognizance of all causes, civil or criminal, of a particular nature,⁷¹ or courts whose judgment is conclusive until modified or reversed on direct attack, and who are competent to decide on their own jurisdiction.⁷² Courts of limited or special jurisdiction are those which can take cognizance of a few specified matters only;⁷³ those which have only a special jurisdiction for a particular purpose, or are clothed with special powers for the performance of specified duties, beyond which they have no authority of any kind.⁷⁴ Courts of original and general jurisdiction are competent by their constitution to decide upon their own jurisdiction and to exercise it to a final judgment without setting forth in their proceedings the jurisdictional facts and evidence upon which it is rendered; their records import absolute verity, and cannot be impugned by averment or proof to the contrary, and there can be no judicial inspection behind the judgment save by appellate power; whereas on the other hand courts of special and limited jurisdiction are so constituted that their judgments may be looked through for the facts and evidence necessary to sustain them, their decisions do not furnish evidence of themselves to show jurisdiction and its lawful exercise, and every requisite for either must appear upon the face of their proceedings or they are nullities.⁷⁵ The distinction between courts of general and courts of limited jurisdiction is to be found largely in the laws which establish them,⁷⁶ and the line of demarcation is not always definite.⁷⁷ When a court of general jurisdiction proceeds under a special statute it becomes a court of limited jurisdiction for the purpose of such proceeding.⁷⁸ The question whether a court is of general or inferior jurisdiction is, however, to be determined by the nature of the jurisdiction conferred, and not by the territorial limits within which it is to be exercised.⁷⁹

§ 3. Courts of Original and Courts of Appellate Jurisdiction

Courts of original jurisdiction are those wherein a cause arises, whereas courts of appellate jurisdiction are those wherein it is reviewed.

Courts of original jurisdiction are those in which an action has its first source or existence, and which do not take jurisdiction of it by appeal.⁸⁰ Courts of appellate jurisdiction are those which review causes removed by appeal or error from another court.⁸¹

§ 4. Courts of Law and Courts of Equity

Broadly speaking, a court of law is any tribunal duly administering the laws of the land, although in a narrower sense it is a tribunal proceeding according to the common law in contradistinction to a court of equity, which latter is a tribunal proceeding according to the precepts of chancery and sometimes called a "court of conscience."

In the broad sense of the term, a court of law is any duly constituted tribunal administering the laws of the state or nation.⁸² In a narrower sense courts of law are those which administer justice according to the principles and forms of the common law,⁸³ while courts of equity are those which administer justice according to the rules and principles of equity.⁸⁴

Court of conscience is a name frequently applied to the courts of equity or of chancery, not as a name but as a description.⁸⁵

§ 5. Courts of Record and Courts Not of Record

Broadly speaking, a court of record is one keeping a written account of its proceedings which imports verity, or which is so denominated by the statute of its creation.

A court of record has been defined as a court where the acts and judicial proceedings are enrolled in parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony,⁸⁶ and which has power to fine and imprison for contempt of its authority;⁸⁷ a court that is bound to keep a record of its proceedings, and that may fine or imprison;⁸⁸ a court whose proceedings are enrolled for a perpetual memorial and testimony, which rolls are called the records of the court, and are of such high and super-eminent authority that their truth is not to be called in question;⁸⁹ a judicial, organized tribunal having attributes and exercising functions independently of the person of the magistrate designated generally to hold it,⁹⁰ and proceeding according to the course of the common law;⁹¹ and a court having a seal,⁹² although the presence or absence of a seal is not necessarily conclusive of the character of a court as one of record.⁹³ Courts may be designated by statute as courts of record, as will more fully appear from an examination of the statutes and of the decisions referred to infra this note,⁹⁴ and it has been said that a test entitled to considerable weight in determining whether or not a court is one of record is whether the legislature creating the court has or has not declared it to be a court of record.⁹⁵ The phrase "court of record," as employed in state statutes, has been construed as restricted to state or federal courts within the state in question.⁹⁶

Courts not of record include inferior local courts,⁹⁷ or inferior courts lacking the power to fine or imprison for contempt,⁹⁸ or those of inferior dignity, which have no power to fine or to imprison, and in which the proceedings are not enrolled or recorded;⁹⁹ and all courts which do not come within the definition of a court of record are courts not of record.¹

Distinguished from "office". A court of record is essentially not an "office," but an institution, entity, or agency within itself.²

Court of record having a clerk or prothonotary. A statutory phrase meaning a court having a clerk or prothonotary as distinguished from a court in which the justice is the recording officer.³

§ 6. Civil and Criminal Courts

Civil courts are those determining controversies between private persons, and criminal courts those adjudicating offenses alleged to have been committed against the state.

Civil courts are those which are authorized by the common law, or by the constitution or statute, to decide upon civil actions, and on disputes between persons in their private capacity—whether such matters relate to the persons of the parties, or to their personal or real property.⁴ Criminal courts are those established for the repression and punishment of crimes.⁵ Owing to the distribution of the jurisdiction into civil and criminal cases, the courts having jurisdiction of criminal cases were designated as "criminal courts" and those having jurisdiction of civil cases became known as "civil courts."⁶ The word "criminal" is used in this connection to describe the court, rather than to designate it by its supposed name, the word having reference to the character of the business—that is, criminal business—to be transacted in the court.⁷

§ 7. Superior and Inferior Courts

Broadly speaking, superior courts are those exercise-

ing both original and supervisory jurisdiction, and inferior courts are those with very limited jurisdiction subject to review by higher tribunals.

A superior court is a court with controlling authority over some other court or courts, and with certain original jurisdiction of its own.⁸ Inferior courts are those which are subordinate to other courts or which are of a very limited jurisdiction;⁹ those which are of very restricted jurisdiction and whose judgments and decrees can be reviewed by the higher tribunals.¹⁰ According to the technical meaning of the term, inferior courts are those the judgments of which, standing alone, are mere nullities, and whose proceedings, in order to give them validity, must show their jurisdiction.¹¹ A court of limited jurisdiction is not necessarily an inferior court in a technical sense.¹²

§ 8. Supreme Courts

Supreme courts are ordinarily those possessing the highest and controlling jurisdiction, although in some states they are courts of supervisory jurisdiction but not of final resort.

Supreme courts are those which possess the highest and controlling jurisdiction; also, in some states, a court of higher jurisdiction than the superior courts, although not the court of final resort.¹³ Supreme court of the United States is considered in the C.J.S. title Federal Courts §§ 191–281, also in 25 C.J. p 858 note 67–p 961 note 24.

§ 9. Local Courts

A local court is one having jurisdiction of causes arising within a limited area, such as a town or borough.

Local courts are those which have jurisdiction of causes occurring in certain places only, usually the limits of a town or borough.¹⁴

§ 11. Particular Courts

Various particular courts, American and English, are enumerated and defined in this section.

Admiralty court is a court having jurisdiction of causes arising under the rules of admiralty law,¹⁶ and such courts are discussed in §§ 3, 4 of the title Admiralty.

Circuit court. In many of the states this is the name of the court of general original jurisdiction, clothed with power to try by judge and by jury the issues of fact in ordinary actions, but subject to a review of its determinations in the supreme court of the state or other appellate tribunal.¹⁷ They have been called common-law courts.¹⁸

County court. The name is used in many of the states to designate the ordinary courts of record having jurisdiction for trials at nisi prius.¹⁹ As defined with reference to its jurisdiction, the term may mean a court presided over by the county judge alone,²⁰ the quorum court presided over by the county judge or county chairman,²¹ and, under particular circumstances, the municipal court in spite of its name.²² The nature and scope of the jurisdiction of county courts in particular states is considered infra §§ 249-297.

Court for the trial of impeachments or Court of impeachment. A general phrase designating a tribunal empowered to try any officer of government or other person brought to its bar by the process of impeachment.²³

Court of appeals is an appellate tribunal which is often the court of last resort.²⁴ Courts of appeals are an integral part of the state government, to which part of the administration of justice is delegated, and are corporate entities or organized bodies existing only in contemplation of law.²⁵ Circuit courts of appeal are discussed in the C.J.S. title Federal Courts §§ 282-301, also 25 C.J. p 961 note 25-p 973 note 73.

Court of common pleas, sometimes called merely "common pleas," is a tribunal of original and general jurisdiction for the trial of issues of fact and law according to the principles of the common law, a court having jurisdiction generally of civil actions;²⁶ a distinctive court which has jurisdiction of common-law pleas and several things not belonging to nor within the jurisdiction of other courts;²⁷ and the tribunal has been referred to as the "general fountain of justice" available for the protection of the common-law or statutory rights of the citizen where no other provision is made for their redress.²⁸

Court of error. An expression applied in some of the United States to the court of last resort in the state; and in its most general sense denotes any court having power to review the decisions of lower courts on appeal, error, certiorari, or other process.²⁹

Court of inquiry is a term which has been applied to a justice of the peace, who, acting under statutory authority, may summon and examine witnesses in relation to an offense which he has good cause to believe has been committed.³⁰ Military courts of inquiry are discussed in the title Army and Navy §§ 48-50, and in the C.J.S. title Militia § 24, also 40 C.J. p 697 notes 52-59.

Court of last resort. A court from which there is no appeal,³¹ or in which the decision is final and controlling between the parties.³²

Court of nisi prius or Nisi prius court. The term "court of nisi prius" is frequently used as a general designation of any court exercising general, original jurisdiction in civil cases, being used interchangeably with "trial-court."³³ "Nisi prius court" has been defined as a court held for the trial of issues of fact, before a jury and a single presiding judge, and is familiarly used to denote the forum, whatever its statutory name, in which the cause was tried to a jury as distinguished from the appellate court.³⁴

Court of oyer and terminer. The name "court of oyer and terminer" is generally used (sometimes, with additions) as the title, or part of the title, of a state court of criminal jurisdiction, or of the criminal branch of a court of general jurisdiction, being commonly applied to such courts as may try felonies, or the higher grades of crime.³⁵

"Courts of special sessions" is a generic term applicable to those courts which have no stated terms and are not continuous, but which are organized and exist only for the trial of each particular case, and become functus officio when the judgment is rendered therein.³⁶

District courts are inferior courts established in some states with a jurisdiction for the most part similar to that of county courts.³⁷ Federal district courts are considered in the C.J.S. title Federal Courts §§ 302-311, also 25 C.J. p 973 note 76-p 980 note 9.

Ecclesiastical courts, as such, seem never to have existed in the United States,³⁸ and are defined infra this section under the heading relative to English courts. The term, however, as shown infra note 61, is sometimes applied to courts exercising probate jurisdiction.

Municipal or city courts; mayor's court. Municipal courts are courts with statutory jurisdiction in criminal or civil cases, or both, usually limited not only in amount, but by the requirement that suits can be instituted only against residents, and crimes prosecuted only where committed within the municipality,³⁹ and their territorial authority is confined to the city or community in which they are erected.⁴⁰ A city court is one whose jurisdiction is coextensive with a city,⁴¹ and the terms "city court" and "municipal court" are substantially synonymous.⁴² It has been said that city courts may be inferior courts of law and equity,⁴³ also that they are "inferior courts of record."⁴⁴ The term has been limited to courts from which there is a prescribed mode of appeal.⁴⁵ A mayor's court is a court established in some cities, in which the mayor sits with the powers of a police judge or committing magistrate with respect to offenses committed with-

Similar to police courts

"The term is equivalent to police courts. They derive their jurisdiction and power to act in any given case from the statute creating them.

. . . Undoubtedly they were patterned after English courts of 'Sessions of the Peace' and 'Courts of Petty Sessions.' Historically they were known originally as courts of special sessions of the peace. They were held generally by a justice of the peace who acted as a court, not as a magistrate.—People v. Kraft, supra.

The court of special sessions held by a city magistrate is a "Court of Special Sessions of the City of New York."—People ex rel. Dembinsky v. Fox, 168 N.Y.S. 1008, 1013, 182 App. Div. 642.

"Sessions of the peace" is a term which was used both as the name of a court of record held before two or more justices of the peace for the execution of the authority given them by their commission and certain acts of parliament, and also to designate a sitting of justices for the execution of those purposes which are confided to them by their commission and by several acts of parliament.—People v. Powell, 14 Abb. Fr., N.Y., 91, 93—57 C.J. p 288 notes 38, 39.

in the city, and sometimes with civil jurisdiction in small causes, or other special statutory powers.⁴⁶ The status and jurisdiction of such courts in particular states are considered infra §§ 249-297.

Police, recorder's and magistrate's courts. A police court, with which a "recorder's court" is ordinarily synonymous,⁴⁷ is a court for the trial of offenders brought up on charges preferred by the police;⁴⁸ an inferior court exercising a limited jurisdiction over offenses of a criminal character,⁴⁹ and perhaps also a limited civil jurisdiction.⁵⁰ "Magistrate's court" is a local court in some United States cities for the trial of small causes.⁵¹

Probate, surrogate's and similar courts. A "court of probate" or "probate court" has been defined as a court having jurisdiction over the probate of wills, the grant of administration, and the supervision of the management and settlement of the estates of decedents, including the collection of assets, the allowance of claims, and the distribution of the estate,⁵² or more simply as a distinct tribunal for the establishment of wills and the administration of the estates of men dying either with or without wills.⁵³ Such tribunals have also been termed "courts of ordinary,"⁵⁴ "orphans' courts,"⁵⁵ "prerogative courts,"⁵⁶ "register's courts,"⁵⁷ and "surrogate's courts."⁵⁸ Probate courts, surrogate's courts, orphans' courts, courts of ordinary, and similar courts of probate jurisdiction, are judicial tribunals,⁵⁹ and under the practice prevailing in different jurisdictions have been variously called constitutional,⁶⁰ ecclesiastical,⁶¹ or statutory⁶² courts, or courts of law⁶³ or equity,⁶⁴ or independent tri-

§ 12. Exercise of Power a Judicial Act

The exercise of power by a court in accordance with the customary formalities attending its proceedings is judicial in character irrespective of the original nature of the power.

Where power is conferred on a court of justice to be exercised by it as a court, in the manner and with the formalities used in its ordinary proceedings, the action of such court is to be regarded as judicial, irrespective of the original nature of the power.¹⁶ The exercise of judicial power vested by a constitution in the courts named therein has been said to refer to such power and authority as is necessary to the hearing and determination of a matter at law or in equity, and not such procedural acts or orders as may be authorized by a statute in the conduct of the case.¹⁷

§ 13. Seal of Court

Ordinarily, a court of record has a seal. Under constitutional provision the seal of a probate court may serve as the seal of the county court.

While a seal is not necessary to a court of record, the term "court of record" implies that the court has a seal.¹⁸ A constitutional provision that, until otherwise provided, the seal of the probate court shall be the seal of the county court makes the seal of the probate court, in the absence of legislation, the official seal of the county court.¹⁹

§ 14. Expenses and Support of Court

Subject to statutory and constitutional restrictions, a court has inherent power to incur such expenses as may be requisite to the proper performance of its duties.

Courts have inherent power to incur and order paid all expenses necessary for the holding of court and the discharge of the duties thereof,²⁰ and subject to constitutional or statutory provisions may apply public funds for their use.²¹ In the absence of some statutory provision in reference thereto, it is for the court alone to determine what expenditures are necessary to carry on the business of the court;²² but if there is a statute in reference thereto the power of the court is controlled thereby.²³ It is within the power of the state to require a given locality to provide funds for the support of courts created for such locality.²⁴ A constitutional provision that the courts shall be open to every person, and speedy and certain remedy afforded for every wrong, does not mean that the courts shall remain open after the funds provided for their expenses have been exhausted, but is to be construed in connection with a further provision that no municipal corporation shall be allowed to become indebted for any purpose to an amount exceeding the income and revenue provided for the year.²⁵

While there are many definitions²⁶ of the term, as shown infra this section, in a broad and general sense jurisdiction is judicial power,²⁷ and fundamentally the term means the power or capacity given by law to a court or other body or officer to hear and determine certain controversies.²⁸ The jurisdiction of the courts is in reality a power inherent in the state which is conferred on the courts either directly by the people through their constitution or indirectly through the legislature by laws duly enacted.²⁹ It has been briefly defined as the authority to hear and determine causes or controversies,³⁰ the power and authority conferred on a court by the constitution and laws to hear and determine causes between parties and to carry its judgments into effect;³¹ the power constitutionally conferred on a judge or magistrate to determine causes according to law and to carry the sentence into execution;³² or in a more limited sense as the power

General and particular senses of term

Word "jurisdiction" is sometimes used in general sense, in which it signifies abstract right of tribunal to exercise its power in causes of certain class, and is sometimes used in a particular sense, in which it relates to right of tribunal to exercise its power with respect to particular matter, general jurisdiction being conferred by the constitution or statutes, and particular jurisdiction by filing of complaint and issuance of summons.—Pease v. Power to render judgment as decisive

To determine jurisdiction the question is whether on the case before the court the action is judicial or extrajudicial, with or without the authority of law to render a judgment or decree on the rights of the litigant parties, and, if the law confers the power to render a judgment or decree, then the court has jurisdiction.—In re Green's Estate, 196 P. 128, 80 Okl. 256.

land;⁶¹ jurisdiction as appertained to the common law of England, as administered through her courts;⁶² the power of the court to hear and determine cases according to the rules of common law.⁶³ The term as applied to courts is used to distinguish these courts from those which have no jurisdiction save in equity, in admiralty, or in matters not involving offenses or rights under the common law.⁶⁴

Jurisdiction of a particular court is that portion of the judicial power which it has been authorized to exercise by the constitution or statutes.⁶⁵

Jurisdiction over the people. A statute giving certain courts "full jurisdiction and power in and over the people" of a certain territory gives jurisdiction over property within such territory as well as over persons residing therein.⁶⁶

Consultive jurisdiction. Where one court aids another by giving an opinion on a matter which the latter has under consideration, the court which gives the opinion is said to exercise a consultive jurisdiction.⁶⁷

Jurisdiction in rem and in personam. Jurisdiction is of two kinds, jurisdiction of the person or jurisdiction in personam, and jurisdiction of the thing or jurisdiction in rem.⁶⁸ Jurisdiction of the person is the power of a court to render a personal judgment, or to subject the parties in a particular case to the decisions and rulings made by it in such case,⁶⁹ and is obtained by appearance or by serving the proper process in the manner required by law on persons or parties subject to be sued in a particular action.⁷⁰ Actions in rem and in personam are discussed in Actions § 1.

Summary jurisdiction is the jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forthwith.⁷¹

The term "venue jurisdiction" means the power of the particular court to function,⁷² and raises the question of the judicial power of such particular court to determine the cause before it.⁷³ The distinction between "venue" and "jurisdiction" is discussed infra in subdivision c of this section.

"Judicial power", which is defined in this work under the word "Judicial," also in 34 C.J. p 1183 note 39-p 1184 note 55, cannot exist without jurisdiction, and must of necessity be exercised within the scope of jurisdiction and not beyond it.⁷⁴

"Plenary power," as the term is used in defining the jurisdiction of a court, means full, entire, complete and absolute power.⁷⁵

What law governs. The law of the forum determines the jurisdiction of a court.⁷⁶

b. Lack of Jurisdiction Generally

Strictly speaking, lack of jurisdiction means lack of judicial power to act in the premises, although lack of jurisdiction has been loosely used to convey the idea of error in rendering a decision, and also that of forbearance from the exercise of jurisdiction.

Lack of jurisdiction, it has been said, may consist in lack of judicial power to act at all in a given situation or with reference to a certain subject matter, or may denote want of jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action in a particular instance where prescribed conditions precedent to the exercise of judicial power have not been complied with.⁷⁷ In cases where the idea intended to be conveyed is that the exercise of judicial power would be erroneous, there is sometimes said to be a "want of jurisdiction,"⁷⁸ although, strictly speaking, "want of jurisdiction" refers to want of power rather than to the erroneous exercise thereof.⁷⁹ The court's forbearance from exercising its power is sometimes called "lack of jurisdiction."⁸⁰

c. Distinctions, Including Distinction between Jurisdiction and Venue

"Jurisdiction" has been distinguished from "judgment," "merits," and other terms. "Jurisdiction" is distinguished from "venue" in that the latter refers to the place of trial and the former to the power to hear the trial or case.

Jurisdiction is a subject which relates to the power of the court and not to the rights of the parties as between themselves,⁸¹ and has been distinguished from "judgment" or "decision";⁸² and "jurisdiction" has been distinguished from "merits" in that the former means the power to entertain the suit, consider the merits, and render binding judgment, whereas the latter means the various elements entering into plaintiff's right to the relief sought.⁸³ Jurisdiction is distinguished from procedure in that "jurisdiction" relates to the court or forum that may hear and determine a controversy and "procedure" relates to the form or manner of conducting the suit.⁸⁴

Distinguished from "venue." The distinction between "jurisdiction" and "venue" has been plainly

established⁸⁵ and has frequently been recognized.⁸⁶ Jurisdiction connotes the power to decide a case on the merits, while venue connotes locality, the place where the suit should be heard.⁸⁷ The word "venue," unless it is given jurisdictional effect by localizing the action, relates only to the place where or the territory within which either party may require the case to be tried, and unless it is a localized action, the question of jurisdiction of subject matter is not involved.⁸⁸ "Venue" as a matter of procedure does not arise until an action is started.⁸⁹ The mere existence of general rules of venue, whether in common law or statutory form, does not, of itself, affect the right of the court to hear and determine foreign causes.⁹⁰

§ 16. General and Limited or Special Jurisdiction

General jurisdiction extends to all controversies, and special or limited jurisdiction is confined to particular controversies or is such as must be exercised under statutory limitations.

General jurisdiction is such as extends to all controversies which may be brought before a court within the legal bounds of rights and remedies.⁹¹ Limited or special jurisdiction, on the other hand, is jurisdiction which is confined to particular causes,⁹² or which can be exercised only under the limitations and circumstances prescribed by the statute.⁹³

15 C.J. p 726 note 13.

A court exercising special statutory jurisdiction is governed by the same rules as courts of limited jurisdiction.⁹⁴

§ 17. Original and Appellate Jurisdiction

Original jurisdiction is that of a court to proceed in the first instance, and appellate jurisdiction comprises the power of a superior court to review and revise the final judgment of an inferior tribunal.

Original jurisdiction is jurisdiction conferred on, or inherent in, a court in the first instance.⁹⁵ Appellate jurisdiction is the power and authority conferred on a superior court to rehear and determine causes which have been tried in inferior courts;⁹⁶ the cognizance which a superior court takes of a case removed to it, by appeal or writ of error, from the decision of an inferior court;⁹⁷ or the review by a superior court of the final judgment or order of some inferior court.⁹⁸ While it is the essential criterion of appellate jurisdiction that it revises and corrects the proceedings in a cause already instituted and does not create that cause,⁹⁹ yet such jurisdiction once established not only includes the power to reverse the judgment, but also to control and direct the subsequent action of the subordinate court,¹ as well as to issue all writs and process in aid of such jurisdiction.²

§ 18. Exclusive and Concurrent or Coördinate Jurisdiction

Exclusive jurisdiction is sole jurisdiction and concurrent jurisdiction is that shared with another tribunal.

Exclusive jurisdiction is jurisdiction confined to a particular tribunal or grade of courts³ and possessed by it to the exclusion of all others,⁴ or jurisdiction possessed by a particular court to the exclusion not of all other courts but merely to the exclusion of other courts of the same grade;⁵ that jurisdiction which gives to one tribunal sole power to try the cause.⁶

Concurrent or coördinate jurisdiction is that jurisdiction exercised by different courts at the same time over the same subject matter and within the same territory, and wherein litigants may in the first instance resort to either court indifferently,⁷ that of several different tribunals, each authorized to deal with the same subject matter,⁸ and when a proceeding in respect of a certain subject matter can be brought in any one of several different courts, they are said to have concurrent jurisdiction.⁹ The term is usually applied to two or more courts,¹⁰ and concurrent jurisdiction may be briefly defined as "equal jurisdiction" or "same jurisdiction."¹¹

§ 19. Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction

Criminal jurisdiction is the power to take cognizance of a criminal offense and to impose sentence following a lawful trial. Civil jurisdiction is that which exists when the matter is not of a criminal nature.

The terms "civil" and "criminal" when used in reference to jurisdiction or judicial proceedings generally refer to the nature and form of the remedy, and the cause of action or occasion for instituting the proceedings.¹² Criminal jurisdiction is that which exists for the punishment of crimes,¹³ and has been defined as the power and authority constitutionally conferred on a court, judge, or magistrate to take cognizance of an offense and to pronounce the judgment or sentence provided by law, after a trial in the manner sanctioned by law as proper and sufficient;¹⁴ and its nature and scope are discussed in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 107, also in 16 C.J. p 147 notes 5-9. Civil jurisdiction is that which exists when the subject matter is not of a criminal nature.¹⁵

Territorial jurisdiction is the power of a court with reference to the territory within which it is to be exercised.

Territorial jurisdiction has been defined as the power of the tribunal considered with reference to the territory within which it is to be exercised.¹⁶ connotes power over property and persons within the territory, and has been distinguished from jurisdiction over the subject matter.¹⁷ The territorial jurisdiction of a court is a matter of substance and not of form, a limitation which is fundamental and not merely theoretical.¹⁸ The jurisdiction of the state within its own territory is susceptible of no limitation not imposed by itself.¹⁹

§ 21. Complete Jurisdiction

Complete jurisdiction connotes both the power to hear and determine and the power to enforce the judgment rendered. To be complete the jurisdiction should extend to the subject matter; in actions in personam it must extend to the person; in proceedings in rem it must extend to the res in contest.

Complete jurisdiction includes not only the power to hear and determine, but the power to enforce the determination,²⁰ as the judgment or decree is the end for which jurisdiction is exercised, and it is only through the judgment and its execution that the power of the court is made efficacious and its jurisdiction complete.²¹ To render the jurisdiction of a court complete, it must have jurisdiction over the subject matter,²² and in actions in personam over the person,²³ or in proceedings in rem over the res or matter in contest.²⁴

§ 22. Competent Jurisdiction

"Competent jurisdiction" may mean abstract authority to hear and determine cases involving a certain subject matter or jurisdiction over the person and cause. A court of competent jurisdiction is one having power at the time of acting to do the particular act.

The term "competent jurisdiction" is susceptible of two meanings; it may signify that the court must acquire and exercise jurisdiction competent to grant an application, through and by reason of a strict conformity to the requirements of a statute, or it may signify jurisdiction over the subject matter, a sort of authority in the abstract, to hear and determine a case.²⁵ In its usual signification, however, the term embraces the person as well as the cause.²⁶

A court of competent jurisdiction is one having power and authority of law at the time of acting to do the particular act;²⁷ one that has jurisdiction both of the person and of the subject matter;²⁸ one provided for in the constitution or created by the legislature and which has jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person;²⁹ the court which has power or authority conferred on it by law to hear and determine a particular application,

§ 23. Jurisdiction of the Subject-Matter

Jurisdiction of the subject matter is the power to hear and determine the case and the question involved.

Jurisdiction of the subject matter is the power to hear and determine cases of the general class to which the proceedings in question belong;³² the power to deal with the general subject involved in the action;³³ and means not simply jurisdiction of the particular case then occupying the attention of the court but jurisdiction of the class of cases to which the particular case belongs,³⁴ the authority to hear and determine both the class of actions to which the action before the court belongs and the particular question which it assumes to determine.³⁵ "Jurisdiction over the subject-matter" means the nature of the cause of action and relief sought, and such jurisdiction is conferred by the sovereign authority which organizes the court and is to be sought for in the general nature of the court's powers or in the authority especially conferred on the court.³⁶ In order for a court to have "jurisdiction of the subject-matter," the particular issue determined must be properly brought before it in the particular proceeding for determination.³⁷

Elements of jurisdiction of subject matter are considered infra § 37 et seq.

Distinctions. Jurisdiction of the subject matter has been distinguished from jurisdiction of the person,³⁸ and from an appellate court's duty to hear and determine the cause.³⁹

§ 24. Jurisdictional Facts

The jurisdictional facts are those conditioning the power of the court to decide the issues of a case.

Jurisdictional facts are those which condition the power of the courts to decide some of the issues in the case, like the nature of the subject matter and the service of process,⁴⁰ and the power to grant relief has been called part of the jurisdictional facts.⁴¹

36. Va.—Wilson v. State Highway Commissioner, 4 S.E.2d 746.

Source of jurisdiction

(1) Jurisdiction of the subject matter is acquired by the act creating the court, since "subject-matter" means the nature of the cause of action, and of the relief sought.—Motfatt v. Cassimus, 190 So. 299, reversing 190 So. 297, 28 Ala.App. 582.

(2) "Subject-matter" of which a court has jurisdiction relates to right of the court to try and dispose of particular character of case either criminal or civil, and measure of such jurisdiction emanates from constitution, or from statute enacted pursuant to authority conferred by constitution.—Cushing v. Doudistal, 129 S.W.2d 527, 278 Ky. 779.

38. U.S.—Monarch Anthracite Mining Co. v. Coffin, C.C.A.Pa., 102 F.2d 337.

Distinction stated

(1) "Jurisdiction of subject-matter" relates to the judicial power of the court to determine the cause, and "jurisdiction of the person" of defendant relates to whether defendant is properly before the court and subject to its jurisdiction.—Monarch Anthracite Mining Co. v. Coffin, supra.

(2) Component elements required to confer jurisdiction on a court consists of "jurisdiction of the person," and "jurisdiction of the subject matter"; the former refers to bringing person to be affected by judgment before court so as to give him an opportunity to be heard, while the latter pertains to right of the court, under the laws of the sovereignty where it sits, to adjudicate the particular character of case, or issue.—Swartz v. Caudill, 130 S.W.2d 80, 279 Ky. 206.

39. Mo.—McClain v. Kansas City Bridge Co., 88 S.W.2d 1019, 338 Mo. 7, reversing, App., 83 S.W.2d 182.

Litigant's statutory right of appeal as raising different question

A court's "jurisdiction of the subject-matter" of an action means the nature of the cause of action or the relief sought or the power to entertain the suit and should not be confused with statutory right of a litigant to appeal, the presence and exercise of which results in the appellate court's duty to hear and determine the cause.—McClain v. Kansas City Bridge Co., supra.

§ 25. Excess of Jurisdiction

Excess of jurisdiction is the state of being outside the limits of jurisdiction and is distinguished from complete lack of jurisdiction in that the act, although unauthorized with respect to the particular case, is still within the general power of the court.

Excess of jurisdiction may be defined as the state of being beyond or outside the limits of jurisdiction,⁴² and, as distinguished from the entire absence of jurisdiction, means that the act, although within the general power of the judge, is not authorized, and therefore void, with respect to the particular case, because the conditions which alone authorize the exercise of his general power in that particular case are wanting, and hence the judicial power is not in fact lawfully invoked.⁴³ Although a court may have jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, its act or order may, nevertheless, be in excess of its jurisdiction, as being something which it has no power to do;⁴⁴ and it has been said that any act of a court in violation of statutory prohibition may be considered to be in excess of jurisdiction.⁴⁵

Absence of facts warranting action after inquiry

When jurisdiction to inquire and act depends on existence of certain facts, absence of proof of such facts limits power to that of inquiry only, and, if action is attempted, it is in excess of jurisdiction.—King v. Superior Court in and for San Diego County, 56 P.2d 268, 12 Cal.App.2d 501.

appears in §§ 120-139, flows from constitutional and statutory provisions, and from the common law so far as not repugnant to the federal and state constitutions and laws;⁶⁰ and courts can neither assume jurisdiction which is not conferred on them,⁶¹ nor decline, as appears in § 90 infra, that which is conferred, unless they are invested with discretion. Jurisdiction may depend on the existence of one of two or more alternative facts or conditions;⁶² and where certain facts must exist as a necessary prerequisite to the jurisdiction of a court, they must exist at or before the time when the court assumes jurisdiction.⁶³ Whenever the attention of the court is called to the absence of a jurisdictional fact, it may, and should, refuse to exceed its powers.⁶⁴ Delay in instituting an action for a period greater than that prescribed by a statute of limitations will not deprive a court of jurisdiction.⁶⁵

§ 29. Enlargement of Jurisdiction by Intendment

While, as a general rule, jurisdiction may be conferred on a court by necessary implication, as well as by express grant, special jurisdictional acts cannot be enlarged by implication or intendment beyond the express letter of the grant.

While it has been said that jurisdiction cannot be assumed by implication,⁶⁶ other courts have recognized that jurisdiction may be conferred on a court by necessary implication as effectually as by express terms.⁶⁷ However, special jurisdictional acts cannot be enlarged by implication or intendment beyond the express letter of the grant.⁶⁸ The name applied to a court will not of itself increase its jurisdiction.⁶⁹

§ 30. Limitation of Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction cannot be limited by the parties to a controversy, or by restrictions deriving their validity from a source outside the state or nation.

to express or implied limitations of federal law,⁷⁰ it has been broadly stated that, within territorial limits, the jurisdiction of the courts of each state or nation is limited only by constitution or treaty⁷¹ and is not subject to restrictions deriving their validity from an external source.⁷² Jurisdiction cannot be limited by the parties to a controversy,⁷³ and the name applied to a court will not of itself limit its jurisdiction.⁷⁴

The power of the legislature to limit the jurisdiction of courts, and the exercise thereof, is discussed in §§ 122-139 infra.

§ 31. Inherent Powers of Courts certain inherent powers and certain implied powers in addition to those expressly conferred on them.

Courts,⁷⁵ at least those of general jurisdiction,⁷⁶ possess certain inherent powers, and certain powers which may be said to be implied from a general grant of jurisdiction,⁷⁷ in addition to those expressly conferred on them. The inherent powers of courts are derived from the laws to which the courts owe their existence,⁷⁸ and do not exist without express or implied grant.⁷⁹ It is a just inference that an alleged power of the court which has lain dormant during the whole period of English jurisprudence and which no court in America has ever attempted to exercise until within a very recent period never in fact had any existence.⁸⁰ incidental powers of courts is discussed in §§ 86-88 infra.

§ 32. Partial Jurisdiction

The invalidity of part of the proceedings of a court because of want of jurisdiction will not destroy the entire proceedings.

Proceedings of a court may be valid in part and void as to the residue, as where its action in some part is within its jurisdictional powers, while in other parts its action is without jurisdiction.⁸¹

§ 33. Effect of Pleadings

While jurisdiction will not attach without proper pleadings, jurisdiction will attach if the pleadings contain sufficient matter to challenge the court's attention and to authorize it to deliberate and act.

Before the power to hear and determine a cause attaches, the parties must be brought before the tribunal by proper pleading according to the practice and the law of each particular state,⁸² but jurisdiction cannot be conferred by averments in the pleadings where none is conferred by law.⁸³ Jurisdiction does not depend on the sufficiency of the pleadings as such,⁸⁴ or the character of the defense which may exist or may be set up on behalf of defendant;⁸⁵ and if the pleadings contain sufficient matter to challenge the attention of the court, and such a case is thereby presented as to authorize the court to deliberate and act, this is sufficient for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction.⁸⁶ Thus, if a complaint sets forth a case belonging to the general class over which the authority of the court extends, the fact that it fails to state a cause of action does not affect the jurisdiction of the court.⁸⁷ However,

§ 34. Effect of Decision as to Jurisdiction

A court cannot extend its statutory or constitutional powers by judicial fiat.

A court cannot extend its statutory or constitutional powers by judicial fiat,⁹¹ although, as appears in §§ 112-115, infra, subject to same qualifications every court has power to determine its own jurisdiction, and its decision with respect thereto is ordinarily not subject to collateral attack.

C. ELEMENTS OF JURISDICTION

1. IN GENERAL

§ 35. In General

- a. Elements of jurisdiction
- b. Jurisdiction of subject matter
- c. Contentions originating in unlawful transactions
- d. Power to enforce determination

a. Elements of Jurisdiction

The essential elements of jurisdiction may be stated to be that the court have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; that the proper parties are present; and that the point decided is in substance and effect within the issue. In personal actions there must be jurisdiction both of the subject matter and of the person.

The three essential elements of jurisdiction are (1) The court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; the proper parties must be present; (3) the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue.⁹²

The test for determining jurisdiction is ordinarily the nature of the case, as made by the complaint, and the relief sought,⁹³ and the primary essential nature of the suit, and not its incidents.

"Jurisdiction" includes jurisdiction of subject matter, of the person, and to render the particular judgment which was given.—Wall v. Superior Court of Yavapai County, Ariz., 89 P.2d 624.

Jurisdiction is divided into jurisdiction of the subject matter, jurisdiction of the particular cause, involving questions of venue, and jurisdiction of the parties involving questions of process or its service. J. E. Petty & Co. v. Dock Contor Co., D.C.Pa., 283 F. 388, affirm C.C.A., 283 F. 341.

Elements of "active jurisdiction"

The essential requisites of "active jurisdiction" are potential jurisdiction, territorial jurisdiction, active jurisdiction of the subject matter where the proceeding is in rem, of the proper parties where the proceeding is personal, and existence of other facts demanded by the written or statute law.—Farant Corporation v. Francis, 122 S.E. 138 Va. 417.

character, determines the jurisdiction of the court relative to it.⁹⁴

Real parties and a real subject matter are essential to jurisdiction,⁹⁵ but the lack of necessary or proper parties is not necessarily jurisdictional.⁹⁶ The right of a plaintiff to maintain a suit, while frequently treated as going to the question of jurisdiction, has been said to go in reality to the right of plaintiff to relief rather than to the jurisdiction of the court to afford it.⁹⁷

While, as stated infra § 43, the presence of the res or property within the territorial limits of the sovereignty under which the court acts may confer jurisdiction in rem on the court, in personal actions jurisdiction both of the subject matter and of the person or party whose rights are to be affected are essential,⁹⁸ and a state court can acquire no jurisdiction where neither the person nor any property of defendant can be found within the state.⁹⁹ If a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter acquires jurisdiction of the person it has the right and power to hear and determine the particular case;¹ but unless jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the person exist it is the duty of the court to decline to do more than ascertain and declare that it has no power to examine or to decide the merits of the case.² Where, by the statute law of a state, a right of action has become fixed, or a legal liability incurred, that liability may be enforced, and the right of action pursued, in any court having jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties.³ While a court may have general jurisdiction of the subject matter of a class of actions, it does not necessarily follow that it may hear and determine a particular case submitted for its consideration.⁴

b. Jurisdiction of Subject Matter

Jurisdiction of the subject matter is essential to the determination of every case. The court acquires such jurisdiction by the act of its creation, and it is not dependent on the existence of a good cause of action in the particular case, the sufficiency of the bill or complaint, the validity of the demand or the right to the relief requested, the regularity of the proceedings, or the correctness of the decision.

Jurisdiction of the subject matter is defined supra § 23 as the power to hear and determine cases of the general class to which the proceedings in question belong, and, as used in the constitutions and statutes, the word "jurisdiction" means jurisdiction as to subject matter only,⁵ unless an exception arises by reason of its employment in a broader sense.⁶ Thus a court has jurisdiction of the subject matter when it has the right to try the kind of proceeding, whether it be an action or suit;⁷ when it has jurisdiction of the person and the cause is the kind of cause triable in such court;⁸ when the matter is one over which the court's general power extends, and such power is regularly called into action by the application or act of the parties concerned.⁹

A party has the legal right to bring his action in any court which has jurisdiction of the subject matter and can obtain jurisdiction of the parties.¹⁷

The subject matter of a suit, when reference is made to questions of jurisdiction, means the nature of the cause of action, and the relief sought.¹⁸

Breadth of cause of action. A cause of action may, within the court's subjects of jurisdiction, be as broad as parties make it by pleadings, argument, or evidence admitted without objection; but beyond that the court's determination is coram non iudice.¹⁹

Where a complaint sets up several different causes of action, of some of which the court has jurisdiction and of others not, the case may be tried as to those of which the court has jurisdiction,²⁰ although no judgment can be rendered upon the cause of action which is outside the jurisdiction of the court.²¹

c. Contentions Originating in Unlawful Transactions

Jurisdiction of an action is not affected by the fact that the wrongdoer was acting without authority of law.

While it has been said that courts of justice will not assume jurisdiction of contentions originating in unlawful purposes or transactions,²² jurisdiction of an action will not be affected by the fact that the wrongdoer was acting without authority of law.²³

d. Power to Enforce Determination

Power to enforce its determination is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court.

While some definitions of jurisdiction as discussed supra § 15 include or have included the power to enforce the judgment of decree, it is not as a rule regarded as essential that the court possess the power of execution or be able to carry into effect the relief granted in the determination of the litigation in order that it may have jurisdiction.²⁴ It is proper for a court to decline to exercise jurisdiction intended to be complete, where it has no power to enforce its determination,²⁵ and, as stated infra § 43, in actions in rem, where the property is outside the limits of the court's control and its process cannot reach the locus in quo, the court has no jurisdiction.

§ 36. Advisory Opinions

In the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions authorizing them courts have no jurisdiction to render advisory opinions.

In the American colonies, the rendition of advisory opinions was occasionally practiced; but an attempt made at the framing of the federal constitution to incorporate therein a provision perpetuating the practice was unsuccessful, and although no contrary provision was adopted, nor even the distributive clause which appears in so many state constitutions, advisory opinions have never been given under the federal system. A refusal by the judges of the supreme court to comply with a request by President Washington for a construction of the treaty with France appears to have settled the point for that jurisdiction. In the states the familiar constitutional clause which requires the separation of governmental powers has been held impliedly to prohibit the rendition of advisory opinions, and the attitude of the judiciary has generally been unfavorable to the practice.²⁶ Where advisory power is not given by the organic law it cannot be conferred by the legislature.²⁷

The test of jurisdiction is whether the tribunal had the power to enter on the inquiry, and not whether its methods were regular, its findings right, or its conclusions in accordance with the law.—Malone v. Meres, 109 So. 677, 686, 91 Fla. 709, quoting Corpus Juris—15 C.J. p. 735 note 2 [a].

The matter in dispute

The "subject-matter of a suit" refers to the cause, the object or thing in dispute, and, when applied to an action where conflicting claims to really are in issue, it is synonymous with the real property itself.—Patterson Land Co. v. Lynn, supra.

2. JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER OR CAUSE OF ACTION

§ 37. Place Where Cause of Action Accrues

Other elements being present, the place where the cause of action accrues may determine jurisdiction.

Other elements being present, jurisdiction may be determined by the place where an injury is received,²⁸ whether the injury be to the person,²⁹ or to real³⁰ or personal³¹ property. The courts of a state where a contract was to be performed and the breach occurred have jurisdiction of an action on the contract,³² although the contract was made in another state;³³ but it is also held that the courts of the place where the contract is made may have jurisdiction of an action thereon.³⁴ A cause of action on an implied obligation arises where the matters from which the obligation is implied occur.³⁵

If the remedy is purely statutory it is applicable only to cases where the circumstances that warrant it have occurred within the jurisdiction of the state,³⁶ and if neither the person nor the subject matter is within the jurisdiction of the court it has no power over them.³⁷ These rules are not however exclusive in a general sense, for, if there is something to which the jurisdiction can attach, the court will take cognizance of the action even though other matters are involved which of themselves are without the limitation of the court's power, between which and the question of jurisdiction of defendant or of the property or subject matter there may be, and frequently is, a distinction.³⁸

§ 38. Local and Transitory Actions in General

Where the cause of action is necessarily local the territorial jurisdiction is exclusive; but transitory actions may be brought in any state regardless of where the cause of action arose, provided, of course, that other necessary conditions for the court to act are fulfilled.

Where a cause of action is necessarily local the territorial jurisdiction will be exclusive.³⁹ The characteristic feature of a transitory action is that the right of action follows the person of defendant.⁴⁰ Transitory actions are not confined to any particular state;⁴¹ and hence, where a cause of action is transitory in its nature, the courts of a state may assume jurisdiction thereof, although it may be based on an act done in another state⁴² or country.⁴³ Accordingly, a right of action which has accrued in one state will be enforced in the courts of another, unless prohibited by law, or unless it is against morals or natural justice, or unless it is against the general interests of the citizens of that state.⁴⁴ An act of omission which gives rise to no cause of action in the jurisdiction where it occurred cannot be the basis of an action in another state.⁴⁵ Relief will be granted only to such extent as the right asserted is not violative of the public policy of the state whose jurisdiction is invoked.⁴⁶

§ 39. Character of Actions as Local or Transitory in General

Where a cause of action can arise in one place only, the action is local; otherwise it is transitory.

Where a cause of action can arise in one place only, the action is local;⁴⁷ but if the cause of action is one which might arise anywhere the action is transitory.⁴⁸

The principal question involved determines the nature of an action as transitory or otherwise.⁴⁹

The lex fori governs in determining whether an action is local or transitory,⁵⁰ and hence where a cause of action arising in another state is deemed to be transitory in the state where an action thereon is brought, such action may be maintained, although the cause of action would be deemed local in the state where it arose.⁵¹

§ 40. Personal Actions in General

In general, personal actions are transitory.

As a general rule, personal actions are transitory and may be entertained wherever jurisdiction of the parties can be maintained.⁵²

§ 41. Actions on Contract

As a general rule, actions on contracts are transitory and may be brought wherever jurisdiction of the parties can be obtained.

§ 43. Jurisdiction of the Res or Property

Jurisdiction over the res or property is the power of the court over the thing before it without regard to the persons who may be interested in it. Where the res is present within its territorial jurisdiction the court may adjudicate with regard to it, and may determine the obligations of a nonresident; but the court has no jurisdiction of an action in rem where the property in controversy lies without the territorial limits of its jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction over the res or property is the power of a court over the thing before it, without regard to the persons who may be interested therein,⁷⁸ and the presence of the res within the territorial dominion of the sovereign power under authority of which the court acts may confer such jurisdiction.⁷⁹

Debts and choses in action

(1) As regards jurisdiction of state courts, the situs of a chose in action is ordinarily at the residence of the creditor or holder thereof.—Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Northwestern Long-Distance Telephone Co., 173 P. 251, 88 Or. 666.

(2) A debt, which is a mere forced relation between parties, is incapable of location or actual situs.—Redzina v. Provident Inst. for Savings in Jersey City, 125 A. 133, 96 N.J.Eq. 346, affirming 121 A. 519, 1 N.J.Misc. 334.

(3) Debts being intangible have no strictly legal situs, although for most purposes they are given situs of creditor.—Parker, Peebles & Knox v. National Fire Ins. Co., 150 A. 313, 111 Conn. 383, 69 A.L.R. 599.

(4) For purposes of ownership, creditor's domicile is determination of situs of "debt," which is legal relation between two parties, while for purposes of collection, debt is always ambulatory and accompanies person of debtor.—Robinson v. Dana's Estate, 174 A. 772, 87 N.H. 114.

(5) A debt owed by the United States has no locality at the seat of the government, and a state court in the state of the creditor's domicile has jurisdiction to determine conflicting claims to the fund between creditors of the government's creditor.—Phillips v. Noel Const. Co., 266 F. 603, 49 App.D.C. 379, certiorari denied 41 S.Ct. 7, 254 U.S. 631, 65 L.Ed. 447.

(6) Action of foreign testamentary trustee in lending money to resident executors of foreign decedent created debt due to trustee from executors having situs in state.—Braman v. Braman, 258 N.Y.S. 181, 236 App.Div. 164.

(7) Debt does not have situs in state, and drafts do not give jurisdiction so that decree respecting debt would bind nonresident, where debtors and creditor were nonresidents and transaction took place and debt was payable without state.—Larson v. Dubuque Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 213 N.W. 140, 238 Mich. 366.

(8) Respecting suit by Kentucky administrator against Texas debtors to recover general bank deposit and notes representing proceeds of sale of Texas land, such choses in action are located in Texas, not Kentucky.—Robinson v. First Nat. Bank, C.C.A.Tex., 55 F.2d 209, affirming, D.C., 45 F.2d 613.

(9) While an open account owed by a resident debtor to a nonresident creditor is property of the creditor situated within the state over which the state courts can acquire jurisdiction, where banks within the state had issued certificates of deposit, negotiable in form and not charged against any particular fund, but payable only from their general assets, which were owned by nonresident banks and held by the owners outside of the state, the courts of the state could not acquire jurisdiction over the debts represented by such certificates of deposit.—Bank of Jasper v. First Nat. Bank of Rome, Ga., 42 S.Ct. 202, 258 U.S. 112, 66 L. Ed. 490, affirming, C.C.A.Fla., First Nat. Bank of Rome, Ga., v. First Nat. Bank of Jasper, Fla., 264 F. 83, 88, in which certiorari is granted Bank of Jasper v. First Nat. Bank of Rome, Ga., 41 S.Ct. 7, 254 U.S. 622, 65 L.Ed. 443.

(10) Nonnegotiable notes, sent by the owner to another state for a temporary purpose, are not property in that state which gave a court there jurisdiction to seize and sell them in an action in rem, on substituted service.—Selgmann v. Millis, C.C.A.Iowa, 25 F.2d 807.

Stock in corporations

(1) The ownership of stock in a corporation can be settled by the courts in the state in which the corporation was organized.

(2) Situs of stocks owned by Illinois corporation, pledged to nonresident banks, accompanied by delivery of certificates is not in Illinois, as regards court's jurisdiction.—Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Pentress, C.C.A.Ill., 61 F.2d 329, reversing, D.C., Cherry v. Insull Utility Investments, 58 F.2d 1022.

(3) Courts of one state cannot impound, sell, transfer, or in any way incumber corporate stock of foreign corporation.—B. & A. Drilling Co. v. Norton, 20 S.W.2d 413, reversed on other grounds Norton v. B. & A. Drilling Co., Com.App., 34 S.W.2d 1095.

(4) Jurisdiction obtained over corporation by federal district court did not give it jurisdiction to adjudicate rights of legatees of such corporation's capital stock owned by testator and distributed to them by state probate court.—Asher v. Bone, C.C.A.Idaho, 100 F.2d 315.

(5) Stock of a Washington corporation had a situs in Washington, but also had a situs in Idaho, where owners of stock resided in Idaho and adverse claimants of the stock appeared voluntarily in Idaho court and litigated their claims, as regards jurisdiction of court.—Treinies v. Sunshine Mining Co., C.C.A.Idaho, 99 F.2d 651, affirming Sunshine Mining Co. v. Treinies, D.C., 19 F.Supp. 587, certiorari granted Treinies v. Sunshine Mining Co., 59 S.Ct. 439.

(6) Under R.C.1915 § 1986, declaring situs of corporate stock, and Rev.Codes 1915 §§ 3850, 3856, which authorizes substituted service, nonresident owners of stock in domestic corporation may be brought constructively before state court in suit to restrain it from voting such stock, and court has jurisdiction to enter such injunction on proper showing.—Bouree v. Trust Français des Actions de la Franco-Wyoming Oil Co., 127 A. 56, 14 Del.Ch. 332.

(7) New York court had jurisdiction to transfer to New York executors stock certificates in New York of Missouri corporation maintaining transfer office in New York.—Lohman v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 83 S.W.2d 117, 326 Mo. 863.

(8) Presumption exists that certificate evidencing shares of corporate stock followed its owner, and was beyond power of court, where owner was nonresident of state.—Iron City Sav. Bank v. Isaacsen, 164 S.E. 520, 158 Va. 609.
 15 C.J. p 794 note 31 [h].

Under Kentucky declaratory judgment act, circuit court and court of appeals on appeal may adjudicate rights of parties concerning real estate within jurisdiction.—Savin v. Delaney, 16 S.W.2d 1039, 229 Ky. 226.

So where a nonresident has property within the jurisdiction the tribunals of a state may inquire into the nature and extent of his obligations, and in connection therewith may control the disposition of such property or may appropriate it to satisfy the claims of citizens of the state.⁸⁰ While in a proper case a state court may render a judgment in personam and control the acts of the parties regarding property outside the jurisdiction of the state,⁸¹ if a nonresident over whom the court has not otherwise obtained jurisdiction has no property in the state its courts cannot adjudicate his liability to citizens of the state.⁸² In an action in rem, jurisdiction of the court over the property, as the subject matter of the suit, attaches at the institution of the suit.⁸³

A court has no jurisdiction of rights or actions in rem where the property in controversy lies without the limits of the court's control and its process cannot reach the locus in quo;⁸⁴ and neither jurisdiction nor custody of specific property can be conferred on a court or acquired by it by the commencement of a suit which contains no notice, either in the pleadings or other proceedings therein, of any purpose to affect such property.⁸⁵

Whether an action affecting property in another jurisdiction shall be entertained by the courts of a different state having jurisdiction is to be determined according to the law of the latter state.⁸⁶

The fact that the property was improperly brought within the jurisdiction will not prevent the attaching of jurisdiction.⁸⁷

The courts may not entertain, except by consent, an action directed against property of a foreign government, which is in its possession and is destined for its public use, except where proceedings for the enforcement of a lien against such property

Application of maxim, "Mobilia sequuntur personam"

The maxim "mobilia sequuntur personam" is only juristic formula, which cannot destroy fact of physical presence of personal property in another jurisdiction than that of owner's domicile. It is restricted to field within which state, wherein such property is found, chooses to apply other laws than its own. Thus an owner authorizing removal of personalty from his domicile or acquiring such property elsewhere must be deemed to know that it becomes subject to laws of jurisdiction to which removed and that appeal may be made to courts thereof to determine conflicting rights in property. The physical presence in state of documents in which intangible personal property is merged gives state jurisdiction over them except for imposition of property tax, although owner resides in another state.—*Hutchison v. § 44. Actions Relating to Personal Property

Actions relating to personal property are as a rule transitory.

Actions relating to personal property are as a rule transitory,⁸⁹ and hence a court may assume jurisdiction of an action for injury to,⁹⁰ or conversion of,⁹¹ personal property, notwithstanding the act or omission out of which the cause of action arose occurred in another state.

In order to maintain an action of tort founded upon an injury to personal property, and not upon a breach of contract, it is held that the act which caused the injury must at least be actionable under or punishable by the law of the place where it was done.⁹²

Motor vehicles being personal property jurisdiction over them attaches in the territorial limits wherein they are found.⁹³

§ 45. Actions Relating to Land

Actions relating to land are as a general rule local actions. Thus, as stated infra § 46, actions or suits for the recovery of possession or the determination of title are local, as are also action for trespass or injury to land, as discussed infra § 47, unless the action is in the nature of trover; and actions on contracts involving land, while generally transitory, as shown infra § 48, if based on privacy of estate must be brought in the state where the land lies.

§ 46. — Recovery of Possession or Determination of Title

Actions for the recovery of the possession of land, or to determine the title to land, are local and must be brought in the place where the land lies.

All actions to recover possession of land, as actions in rem, are essentially local to the state in which the land lies,⁹⁴ and the same is true where the object of the suit is not ostensibly to obtain possession of, but to determine directly the question of title to, foreign land,⁹⁵ whether the proceeding is

Land lying in several jurisdictions

Circuit court of county wherein three of approximately four hundred and forty acres of land in dispute were situated has jurisdiction.—Jacobs v. Stoner, 7 S.W.2d 698, 319 Mo. 1093.

In a proceeding to compel appropriation of land in another state, the action is based on the right of possession, and whether the action is local must be determined by the laws of the former state; and in view of Ohio Const. art 13 § 5, providing that no right of way shall be appropriated for use of a corporation until full compensation be first made, where a life tenant sold a lot to a railroad company which was succeeded by defendants, and at the death of the life tenant, remaindermen had their choice of an action in ejectment, or an action to compel appropriation, the choice of the latter action would not change the cause from a local to a transitory one, the rights under both actions being based on the remainderman's right of possession.—Eighme v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co., 249 S.W. 717, 213 Mo.App. 342.

Ownership of liens on land

The ownership, as between parties to the action, of liens created by mortgage on land within the state, is a matter of proper determination by the courts of the state.—Davison v. Circuit Court of Kingsbury County, in Ninth Judicial Circuit, 173 N.W. 737, 42 S.D. 254.

§ 47. — Trespass or Injury

Actions for trespass or injury to land are generally regarded as local. However, an action in the nature of trover is transitory, and under some statutes actions may be brought for injuries to land outside the jurisdiction.

It is usually considered that actions for trespass or injury to real estate are local in their character and must be brought in the state where the land is located;⁹⁷ and a court of another state cannot entertain such an action, even though all the persons concerned are within the jurisdiction,⁹⁸ and it is certain that defendant cannot be reached by the courts of the state in which the trespass was committed.⁹⁹ Furthermore, plaintiff cannot, by including injuries to personalty from the same wrongful act, confer jurisdiction on a court of a state other than the one where the land is located.¹ However, where the action is in the nature of trover, although the facts alleged may be sufficient to constitute a cause of action for injury to real estate, the courts of one state may take jurisdiction of such an action where the wrongful act was done in another state;² and accordingly jurisdiction may be entertained of an action for the value of sand removed from land and converted,³ or for trees or timber cut and carried away,⁴ although the wrongful act was committed in another state. There is also authority for the view that an action will lie in one state for any injury to land situated in another state,⁵ it being considered that such an action is purely personal in its nature, the reparation being purely personal, and the relief sought being a recovery of damages.⁶

Act in one state causing damage in another. Where the act is committed in one state but it causes damage and injury to real property in another, the action is generally considered to be transitory and not local as between the states.⁷

Transitory actions will not be entertained to recover money damages as for the conversion of personalty, where the dispute at bottom is one concerning title to land, but the parties will be relegated to courts, with jurisdiction to try title to the land as a local action; and the courts of Massachusetts have no jurisdiction of actions between Maine corporations operating mines in Arizona and having a usual place of business in Massachusetts to recover a debt for money expended in Massachusetts for defendant company's proportion of expense for pumping water from its mine, the actions being founded on Ariz.Civ.Code 1913 pars 4047, 4048, in view of paragraph 4051, and being inherently local.—Arizona Commercial Mining Co. v. § 48. — Contract Actions

Actions for breach of contract respecting land are transitory, unless the contract action is based on privity of estate.

An action to recover pecuniary damages for the breach of a contract respecting lands lying abroad is transitory, if the relation between the parties is

§ 50. Courts of Limited or Inferior Jurisdiction in General

In general, the amount or value of the matter in controversy is an essential element in the determination of the jurisdiction of courts,¹⁴ and the jurisdiction of courts of inferior jurisdiction is very generally limited, under the constitutional or statutory provisions in force in the various jurisdictions, by the amount in controversy, such courts usually being prevented from entertaining actions in which the amount involved exceeds,¹⁵ or is below,¹⁶ a specified amount, or are limited in their jurisdiction

Assignee of grantee

The original grantee under a deed executed in California, conveying land situated in Washington, may recover for breaches of covenants of title and quiet enjoyment, irrespective of whether such covenants run with the land, although the laws of Washington declare such covenants to be express and hence substantially to actions in which the amounts involved are between specified amounts.¹⁷ Where the jurisdiction of an inferior court is made by statute to depend on a specified amount, the jurisdiction does not attach to any case in which the right involved cannot be calculated in money.¹⁸ A court of limited jurisdiction has no power to entertain a cause of action which is not within its jurisdiction;¹⁹ and where a court of limited jurisdiction entertains a cause of action appearing on its face to be not within its jurisdiction, the entry of a judgment for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court does not give the court jurisdiction of the cause, when there is no relinquishment of a part of the cause of action so as to bring it bona fide within the jurisdiction of the court.²⁰

These limitations placed on the jurisdiction of inferior courts are not on the theory that they are incapable of dealing with larger sums.²¹ If the power of the court depends on the amount claimed in the complaint, jurisdiction, once it exists, is not lost because more than the specified sum may be involved; and the inferior or local court, having once obtained jurisdiction, may dispose of the entire dispute between the parties unless prohibited by constitution or statute.²² On the other hand, if the jurisdiction of the court is limited by the amount for which judgment can be rendered, it cannot by interpleading other parties defendant, who are making adverse claims, obtain jurisdiction to render an affirmative judgment going beyond the plaintiff's claim, and for more than the amount of the jurisdiction of the court in original actions; but the fact that the court made an order of interpleader beyond its powers will be immaterial if the judgment rendered is within its powers.²³

Where the jurisdiction of a court is expressly prescribed and limited by the constitution with respect to the amount in controversy, the legislature cannot confer jurisdiction of an amount in excess thereof.²⁴

Transfer of causes. Under some statutes a transfer of causes from a court not having jurisdiction up to the amount demanded to a court having such jurisdiction is authorized.²⁵

§ 51. Courts of Superior Jurisdiction in General

Under constitutional or statutory provisions in force in various jurisdictions, superior courts of general jurisdiction are limited in their jurisdiction to cases involving amounts in excess of a specified amount.

In a number of states, the policy is to force litigants whose disputes involve only comparatively trifling amounts to resort to the inferior courts, and the superior courts of general jurisdiction are, in pursuance of this policy, deprived of original jurisdiction of actions of certain classes where the amount involved is less than a specified sum.²⁶ In order to warrant the dismissal of an action because the amount involved is insufficient to give the court jurisdiction, the facts made to appear of record should create a legal certainty as to such insufficiency.²⁷ Where the amount involved in a contract is such as to give jurisdiction, the court does not lose jurisdiction because the contract is found to be void;²⁸ and where the court has jurisdiction of the principal sum, it may settle the claims of all parties to such sum, although such claims are too small to be the subjects of independent actions in such court.²⁹ Where the jurisdiction of a court is dependent on the fact that the matter in dispute exceeds in value a specified amount, jurisdiction does not attach to any case in which the right involved cannot be calculated in money.³⁰ A case cannot be transferred from the equity side of a court to the law side of the court where the amount involved is not within the jurisdiction of the court.³¹

Action by state or county. It has been held that general statutes as to courts of record restricting the jurisdiction as to the amount in controversy do not bind the state, unless expressly mentioned therein, and that a suit may be brought by the state for a sum less than the statute specifies as necessary to confer jurisdiction,³² but a county has been held not entitled to sue in a particular court for less than the jurisdictional amount.³³

Change of jurisdictional amount. Jurisdiction which has once attached will not be divested by a subsequent statute increasing the minimum amount which must be involved in order to give the court jurisdiction,³⁴ especially where the statutes contain express saving clauses with respect to pending actions or actions on causes of actions which had previously accrued;³⁵ nor will a statute operate to give a court jurisdiction over pending actions which were, when commenced, beyond its jurisdiction.³⁶

On appeal from inferior court. Where an appeal lies from an inferior court to a superior court, where the case is tried de novo, the jurisdiction of the superior court on such appeal is the same as the jurisdiction of the inferior court,³⁷ and if the result of a trial in the superior court shows the real amount in controversy to be an amount which, although within its own jurisdiction, is beyond the jurisdiction of the inferior court in which the action was commenced, the action should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction in the inferior court.³⁸

§ 52. Jurisdiction Independent of Amount in Controversy

Under constitutional and statutory provisions in the different jurisdictions particular and designated courts may have jurisdiction of specified classes of cases irrespective of the amount in controversy.

Creditor's bill

The superior court, taking charge of the entire property of a debtor, under its general jurisdiction, by means of a creditor's bill, has power to collect and dispose of all the assets, and to determine liens and priorities, and to apply the funds accordingly, irrespective of the amount of any claim, and even though the amount of a particular claim is less than the amount required to confer jurisdiction on the court in other instances.—Fulp & Linville v. Kernersville Light & Power Co., 72 S.E. 867, 157 N.C. 157.

Cross action

Cross action for amount within jurisdiction of inferior court, but not within jurisdiction of superior court, cannot, for the first time, be filed in superior court.—Racugno v. Hanovia Chemical & Manufacturing Co., Tex.Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 249.

38. Ark.—Harnwell v. Hollenberg Music Co., 13 S.W.2d 297, 178 Ark. 98.

Miss.—Askew v. Askew, 49 Miss. 301.

The amount in controversy does not always govern with respect to jurisdiction, for in certain classes of cases constitutional or statutory provisions in the various states have conferred jurisdiction on particular designated courts regardless of the amount in controversy, the test of jurisdiction being found in the nature of the case made by the complaint and the relief sought,³⁹ and in such a case a court of general jurisdiction has power to dispose of the matter, even though the amount involved or the ultimate recovery is trifling.⁴⁰ No general rule can be laid down for the determination of the question as to whether the jurisdictional limit applies to a particular proceeding, but each case must be determined for itself in view of the constitutional or statutory provisions with respect to the jurisdiction conferred.⁴¹ So, on the construction of such provisions must depend the jurisdiction of actions on contracts,⁴² or tort actions,⁴³ or suits concerning real property,⁴⁴ of summary

To compel issuance of execution

Where validity of claim supporting judgment in justice's court was not controverted, district court had jurisdiction to entertain suit to compel justice to issue execution thereon, regardless of the amount of the claim involved.—Richburg v. Baldwin, Tex.Civ.App., 89 S.W.2d 851, error dismissed.

Attachments on judgments

In attachments on judgments by way of execution jurisdictional limit has no application.—Havre de Grace Banking & Trust Co. v. Mitchell, 199 A. 843, 175 Md. 68.

Forcible detainer action

That purchase price in land contract which vendor had forfeited for purchaser's default exceeded municipal court's jurisdiction did not defeat jurisdiction of vendor's forcible detainer action against purchaser, since no money judgment, except costs, was contemplated.—State v. Miller, 183 N.E. 41, 48 Ohio App. 173.

Residence of parties

In action commenced in circuit court for amount less than fifty dollars certified copy of ex parte affidavit filed in office of secretary of state reciting that one of defendants was resident of another county and that one of defendants was resident of another state was insufficient to prove that defendants were nonresidents of county so as to confer jurisdiction on court, under statute conferring jurisdiction regardless of amount where parties reside elsewhere.—Wade v. Markham, Mo.App., 106 S.W.2d 939.

Guaranty contract

Jurisdictional limitation held to apply to action on guaranty contract.—Capitol Amusement Co. v. Washington & New Jersey Realty Co., 164 N.E. 715, 90 Ind.App. 389.

Specialties

(1) In an action on a replevin bond the jurisdiction of the municipal court of Chicago extends to cases in which the amount claimed exceeds one thousand dollars.—Strassheim v. Barnes, 212 Ill.App. 299.

(2) Under the municipal court code, there is no limitation as to amount in an action in the municipal court on the bond of a marshal of the city of New York.—Allen v. Wolkof, 169 N.Y.S. 382, 182 App.Div. 634, reversing 168 N.Y.S. 336, 102 Misc. 122.

43. Cal.—Rapaport v. Forer, 66 P.2d 1242, 20 Cal.App.2d 271.

Statute relating to monied demand

(1) A statute providing that, if suit be brought on any monied demand and plaintiff recovers an amount below the court's jurisdiction, the judgment must be set aside and the suit dismissed does not apply to actions in tort.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Watson, 94 So. 551, 208 Ala. 319—King v. Farmer, 34 Ala. 416.

(2) Such a statute does not apply to an action against a constable and the surety on his bond for wrongful removal of property as it is an action ex delicto.—Matlock v. Johnson, 88 So. 182, 17 Ala.App. 669.

Damages from conspiracy

Action for damages arising from conspiracy grounded in fraud is an action in law, and to such an action a jurisdictional minimum has been held applicable.—Rapaport v. Forer, 66 P.2d 1242, 20 Cal.App.2d 271.

Trespass or conversion not shown

Deputy sheriff's inadvertent seizure of articles worth less than one hundred dollars, with other property taken from his lawful possession by owner, who had mingled therewith property not levied on and subsequently accepted return of latter, was held not trespass or conversion, of which district court had jurisdiction.—Leach v. Stone, Tex.Civ.App., 264 S.W. 620, affirmed, Civ.App., 276 S.W. 903.

44. R.I.—Clarke v. Rice, 23 A. 301, 15 R.E. 132.
15 C.J. p 750 note 16.

Failure to contest title immaterial

Jurisdiction on ground that title to land is involved, although the amount in controversy is below the jurisdictional limit, cannot be ousted by defendant conceding plaintiff's title, since the question as to title would always remain, although no contest was made thereon.—Johnson v. Simmons, 290 F. 331, 53 App. D.C. 356.

Possession an element of title

Petition alleging that defendant was interfering with plaintiff's right of possession of land sufficiently showed jurisdiction in the district court, since "title" to lands is the means whereby the owner has possession, and "possession" means the actual control of the property and is prima facie evidence of and one of the elements of title.—Stewart v. Patterson, Tex.Civ.App., 204 S.W. 768, error refused.

Court held to have jurisdiction

The municipal court has jurisdiction to issue a writ of restitution for the possession of premises, because of the termination of the tenancy by nonpayment of the rent, even though the rent was more than one thousand dollars per annum.—Sechrist v. Bryant, 286 F. 458, 52 App.D.C. 286.

Condemnation proceedings

(1) The county court of Cook County has general jurisdiction to pass on questions involved in a condemnation proceeding by the city of Chicago without regard to the amount involved and may enter orders providing for disposition of proceeds of the condemnation judgment without limit as to amount.—City of Chicago v. Goebel, 21 N.E.2d 844, 301 Ill.App. 73.

(2) The county court of Cook County had jurisdiction of a proceeding to establish and enforce a statutory attorney's lien for seven thousand dollars on the proceeds of a judgment of condemnation entered by the court in favor of the city

proceedings for the possession of real property,⁴⁵ of proceedings in reference to estates of deceased and incompetent persons and probate matters generally,⁴⁶ of bastardy proceedings,⁴⁷ of proceedings for the enforcement of liens and mortgages,⁴⁸ of suits for statutory penalties,⁴⁹ of actions in replevin,⁵⁰ of proceedings for the trial of the right of property,⁵¹ of possessory actions,⁵² of tax proceedings,⁵³ and of equitable proceedings in general.⁵⁴ In some jurisdictions, the amount for which judgment is demanded is not determinative of the court's jurisdiction where it is called on to grant equitable relief;⁵⁵ but if plaintiff fails to show a proper case for the equitable action of the court, the amount for which judgment is demanded must be within the jurisdictional limits of the court in order to give it

Rent

(1) City court whose jurisdiction in actions on contract is limited to those where the sum claimed does not exceed one thousand dollars has jurisdiction in summary disposition proceedings to render judgment for any amount of rent due.—Byrne v. Padden, supra.

(2) Municipal court, in summary proceeding, has no jurisdiction to render judgment for landlord for rent in excess of one thousand dollars.—Madison Estates v. Rainess, 225 N.Y.S. 662, 131 Misc. 45.

(3) However, a mere demand for judgment exceeding one thousand dollars for rent in summary proceeding does not deprive municipal court of jurisdiction.—Madison Estates v. Rainess, supra.

48. Tex.—Buckholts State Bank v. Harris, Civ.App., 194 S.W. 961.

Effect of jurisdiction in justice's court

The fact that a justice of the peace may have a certain jurisdiction in such cases involving a particular amount does not deprive the higher court of its jurisdiction.—Faville v. Hadcock, 80 N.Y.S. 23, 39 Misc. 397.

Attachment

In action on note for less than jurisdictional amount, an attachment obtained and levied on land was held, under statute, to give the court jurisdiction.—Hutton v. Rogers, 121 S.W. 698, 134 Ky. 840.

Mechanic's Lien

Under the statute, the question of jurisdiction in an action to enforce a mechanic's lien is dependent on the amount of the debt to be collected, and not on the fact that plaintiff seeks the enforcement of a lien.—Phillips-Burtoiff Manufg Co. v. Campbell, 25 S.W. 961, 93 Tenn. 469.

Vendor's Lien

(1) In suit to recover on a note and to foreclose a vendor's lien retained as security therefor, the district court has jurisdiction without reference to the amount involved.—Buckholts State Bank v. Harris, Tex.Civ.App., 194 S.W. 961.

(2) The district court has jurisdiction of an action on a vendor's lien note, although it is subject to the bar of limitations, and for less than five hundred dollars, since the right to enforce the lien is not cut off until the bar is pleaded.—Burton v. Archinard, Tex.Civ.App., 49 S.W. 634.

Liens on land

(1) The district court has jurisdiction of suits for the enforcement of liens on land, independent of the amount in controversy.—Ablowich v. Greenville Nat. Bank, 67 S.W. 381, 95 Tex. 429.—Ward County Irr. Dist. No. 1 v. Western Union Telegraph Co., Tex.Civ.App., 254 S.W. 1114.

(2) The district court acquiring jurisdiction of a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien on real estate may retain jurisdiction and may render a personal judgment for less than five hundred dollars.—Tenison v. Hagendorn, Tex.Civ.App., 155 S.W. 690.

Damages for holding over

Statute conferring jurisdiction on municipal court of possessory actions between landlord and tenant, irrespective of the value of the property sought to be recovered, was held to carry with it the granting of jurisdiction for the recovery of damages for holding over unlimited in amount.—Capitol Amusement Co. v. Washington & New Jersey Realty Co., supra.

53. Tex.—City of Breckenridge v. Pierce, Civ.App., 251 S.W. 316.

To restrain collection of taxes

Petition to restrain collection of taxes on real estate, on the ground that petitioners' property had been assessed erroneously.—City of Breckenridge v. Pierce, supra.

To review equalization proceeding

The district court has jurisdiction of a direct proceeding to review the action of the commissioner's court, sitting as a board of equalization, in raising the valuation of plaintiff's property, regardless of the amount sought to be recovered.—Ward County v. Wentz, Tex.Civ.App., 69 S.W.2d 571.

54. Ark.—Uptmoor v. Young, 22 S. W. 169, 57 Ark. 528.

Specific performance

A petition alleging defendant's refusal to carry out their agreement to sell corporate stock, that corporation's stock had no market value, could not be obtained otherwise and would have future value far beyond its present value, and that plaintiff had no adequate legal remedy and was entitled to specific performance, was sufficient to invoke equitable relief, so as to bring cause within district court's jurisdiction, even if allegations did not fix amount in controversy at sum within such court's pecuniary jurisdiction.—Berkman v. Levy, Tex.Civ. App., 129 S.W.2d 397, error dismissed, judgment correct.

55. Cal.—Merrill v. Hare, 34 P.2d 194, 139 Cal.App. 462.

Alimony

The superior court has jurisdiction of a suit to establish in this state a foreign judgment for alimony, for the purpose of enforcing it as a continuing judgment for payment of alimony, regardless of the amount of the accrued alimony at the time of judgment.—Straus v. Straus, 41 P.2d 218, 4 Cal.App.2d 461, modifying on other grounds and rehearing denied 42 P.2d 378, 4 Cal.App.2d 461.—Creager v. Superior Court of Santa Clara County, 14 P.2d 552, 126 Cal. App. 280.

jurisdiction of the case.⁵⁶ In proceedings in which the main object is the enforcement of a right which cannot be measured in dollars and cents, the jurisdiction of a court of such matter is not dependent on the amount involved, even though the recovery of a specified amount is sought as an incident to the main object of the action;⁵⁷ but where such proceedings have as their main object the enforcement of a right which can be measured in dollars and cents, statutory provisions limiting the jurisdiction of the court according to the amount in controversy apply.⁵⁸ Limitations on the ordinary jurisdiction of a court based on the amount in controversy do not apply so as to restrict a court in the use of statutory and other recognized means of enforcing its jurisdiction by the amount or value involved.⁵⁹

§ 53. Real Amount Governs

Ordinarily, for jurisdictional purposes, the amount actually in dispute between the parties controls, where this differs from the amount alleged.

In some jurisdictions, a plaintiff may bring a case actually involving an amount below the jurisdictional minimum of the court by making a large demand in his pleadings.⁶⁰ This, however, is not the general rule, and, although the jurisdiction is ordinarily determined by the amount claimed, see infra § 55, or by the alleged value of the property in dispute, see infra § 57, by the weight of authority this is not necessarily conclusive;⁶¹ and the court may investigate in order to determine the real amount,⁶² or even act on its own knowledge of the real amount in controversy acquired on a former trial,⁶³ or the obvious smallness of the amount really involved;⁶⁴

Injunction

(1) Where the right which is sought to be enforced through the restraining and mandatory injunction of the court is one that may not be measured in dollars and cents, the district court has jurisdiction, even though the damages already sustained, which are less than the jurisdictional amount of the court, are sought as an incident to the main purpose of the suit.—Smith v. Kidd, Tex.Civ.App., 228 S.W. 348, error refused.

(2) Amount in controversy is not controlling where controlling purpose of suit, as disclosed by pleadings, is to obtain injunctive relief abating or preventing threatened irreparable damage, for which law affords no adequate remedy, and suit for damages is merely incidental.—Jasper County Lumber Co. v. Biscamp, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 571.

Mandamus

(1) District court would have no jurisdiction to determine controversy involving two hundred and eighty dollars, but it has jurisdiction of suit incidentally involving such sum if only the issuance of a mandamus is directly involved.—Kimmins v. Estes, Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W.2d 387.

(2) Where, in mandamus to compel a county auditor to sign a warrant, petitioner did not seek any judgment as to the amount or validity of his claim, the amount thereof did not affect the district court's jurisdiction of the cause.—Anderson v. Ashe, 90 S.W. 372, 99 Tex. 447.

Setting aside conveyances

Dismissal by superior court for want of jurisdiction of action involving $125.03, the purpose of which is to obtain equitable relief against two defendants as partners and to have certain conveyances set aside as fraudulent, was held error.—Armstrong Grocery Co. v. Banks, 116 S.E. 173, 185 N.C. 149.

Specific performance

The county court has no jurisdiction of a suit for specific performance of a contract, although the damages alleged for its breach, if permitted, are within the amount of which that court has jurisdiction.—Mebane Cotton Breeding Ass'n v. Sides, Tex.Civ.App., 259 S.W. 279—Mebane Cotton Breeding Ass'n v. Sides, Tex.Civ.App., 257 S.W. 302.

Injunction

(1) The county court has no authority to issue an injunction to restrain the execution of a judgment of a justice for less than two hundred dollars, when the whole amount in controversy is less than two hundred dollars.—Phillips v. Sanders, Tex.Civ.App., 80 S.W. 567.

(2) Statutes authorizing issuance of injunction writs necessary to the enforcement of the county court's jurisdiction and providing that writs of injunction in a suit to enjoin the execution of a judgment shall be returned to the court where such suit is pending, or such judgment was rendered, do not give the county court jurisdiction of an original suit to enjoin the seizure and sale of property of an alleged value, not within the jurisdiction of the county court, to satisfy a final judgment, there being no suit pending to which the proceeding is ancillary.—Blanket State Bank of Blanket v. Redwine, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 558.

Mandamus

A court has no power to issue a mandamus to enforce its jurisdiction where the amount claimed, and in regard to which the mandamus was issued, is less than that necessary to be in controversy to confer jurisdiction.—Goree v. Dupree, 1 Tex.A. Civ.Cas. § 825.

59. Tex.—Isbell v. Kenyon-Warner Dredging Co., 261 S.W. 762, 113 Tex. 528.

and wherever the real amount actually in controversy is made to appear, this is the controlling criterion of jurisdiction, even though it may be different from the amount demanded in the complaint or otherwise alleged in the pleadings.⁶⁵ Where there is no uncertainty as to the amount which may be recovered, merely claiming an increased amount will not confer jurisdiction.⁶⁶ An allegation of damages not recoverable must be disregarded.⁶⁷ The real amount, as shown by the evidence produced at the trial, governs on a question of jurisdiction when the allegations are in conflict with it,⁶⁸ and the amount shown by the record and the pleadings, taken as a whole, when these disclose the real sum in dispute, is determinative of the question of jurisdiction.⁶⁹ The mere fact that the cause of action arises out of a demand whose total sum exceeds the jurisdictional limit will not prevent the attaching of that jurisdiction, provided the real amount due in the particular case is alone claimed and such amount is within the jurisdiction.⁷⁰ In distress proceedings, the jurisdiction of a court, acquired on the basis of bona fide allegations, made at the institution of the proceedings, as to the value of the property seized, is not defeated when it subsequently turns out that the value of the property seized exceeds the jurisdiction of the court.⁷¹ However, under statutes which limit the jurisdiction of specified courts in actions to recover a chattel to chattels of a stated value, with or without damages for the taking or detention thereof, in an action to recover a chattel of an alleged value within the jurisdiction of the court, the court will be divested of jurisdiction if, after trial, the value of the chattel proves to be greater than such stated value, but otherwise, it retains jurisdiction, even if the damages for the detention be greater than that amount.⁷² Where, in a replevin action brought in a court of inferior jurisdiction, the value of the property involved and the damages incurred by the defendant exceeds the

Ad damnum prima facie evidence

Under the Massachusetts practice the ad damnum in the declaration is prima facie evidence of the amount in controversy, but is subject to be controlled by evidence as to the amount actually in controversy, and does not estop plaintiff from showing the true facts as to the amount of the claim.—Burmon & Bolonsky v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., D.C.Mass., 39 F.2d 619.

Unmatured installments

Insurer's refusal to pay monthly disability benefits as they accrued did not give insured right to sue for the full coverage as for total and permanent disability, and hence county court at law did not have jurisdiction of insured's cause of action at time when only four installments totaling less than two hundred dollars had matured.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Evans, Tex. Civ.App., 96 S.W.2d 152.

Amount involved held sufficient

Liability of insurer under disability clause of group policy dates from time when insurer by letter to insured denied its liability under policy, and hence, three installments amounting to more than fifty dollars having become due between that date and date of instituting suit, amount involved was within jurisdiction of circuit court.—Young v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 84 S.W.2d 1065, 229 Mo.App. 823, certiorari quashed State ex rel. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Allen, 100 S.W.2d 487.

Liquidated damages as controlling

In an action for breach of a contract for exchange of real property, the sum of one dollar named as consideration for the contract will

Action to cancel mortgages by owner of small interest

In a suit by an alleged owner of one three hundred and twenty-fifth of certain real property, consisting of waterworks and their appurtenances, to cancel and avoid mortgages thereon for four hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, and to declare his interest in the property free from the liens of such mortgages, the sum or value in dispute is the value of the one three hundred and twenty-fifth of the property, which complainant claims to own and seeks to relieve from the lien of the encumbrances.—Cowell v. jurisdiction of that court, the defendant therein may litigate his claim for damages sustained from the wrongful taking and the conversion of the property in another court whose jurisdiction includes the amount involved.⁷³

Incidental rights not considered. The limitation as to amount refers to the sum in dispute and not to the value of rights which are mere incidents.⁷⁴ The fact that a contract itself may be incidentally involved in the suit, does not fix the jurisdiction in accordance with the amount of the contract if the only matter really in dispute is a different sum;⁷⁵ but in an action to recover payments made on a contract in which an adjudication of the validity of the contract is involved, the amount of the contract and not the specific sum sued for is the amount in controversy.⁷⁶

§ 54. How Amount Ascertained or Fixed

a. In general

b. Time as of which jurisdiction determined

73. Okl.—Terwilliger v. Bull, 9 P. 3d 45, 155 Okl. 294.

74. U.S.—Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Shell, C.C.Wash., 125 F. 979—New York Silk Mfg. Co. v. Paterson Second Nat. Bank, C.C.N.J., 10 F. 204.

Collateral effect immaterial

As regards jurisdictional amount, the collateral effect of the judgment of a court is not the test of the court's jurisdiction.—Huey v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, D.C.Ala., 23 F.Supp. 708.

75. La.—Reimann Const. Co. v. Heinz, 137 So. 355, 17 La.App. 687.

Amount of contract held not involved

In an action to recover four hundred dollars earnest money paid by plaintiffs on a contract for the purchase of land for the sum of four thousand dollars, on the ground of failure of defendant vendors to give good title, a plea that the amount in controversy and subject matter of the suit were beyond the jurisdiction of the county court, predicated on allegations of the petition that if the title had been good plaintiffs would have paid the balance of the purchase money and taken the land, and were still willing to do so, was without merit.—Davis v. Fant, Tex. Civ.App., 98 S.W. 193.

76. Tex.—Gossett v. Manley, Civ. App., 43 S.W.2d 622, error refused.

77. Cal.—San Jose Pacific Building & Loan Ass'n v. Corum, 37 P.2d 866, 2 Cal.App.2d 276.

Tex.—Threadgill v. Federal Land Bank of Houston, Civ.App., 26 S.W.2d 345, error dismissed.

Ambiguity as to amount

Where the parties go to trial on an issue within the jurisdiction of the court, the fact that the allegations of the complaint taken in conjunction with the prayer for judgment created some ambiguity and uncertainty as to whether the amount due was within the jurisdiction of the court will not deprive the court of jurisdiction.—Sunset Lumber Co. v. Dunlap, 163 P. 338, 32 Cal.App. 492.

Amount held sufficient

District court had jurisdiction of suit to determine owner of mineral lease rental of four hundred eighty dollars and four rental payments for like amounts to fall due on same date of four succeeding years under ordinary drill or pay lease.—Mineral Investing Corporation v. Bishop Cattle Co., 78 S.W.2d 174, 124 Tex. 387, affirming, Civ.App., 49 S.W.2d 532.

78. Tex.—Losano v. Torres, Civ. App., 234 S.W. 151.

a. In General

The amount or value of the matter actually in dispute between the parties is the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the court, and varies according to the nature of the case and the relief demanded.

In general, the amount actually put in controversy determines the jurisdiction of the court;⁷⁷ that which a party in good faith seeks to obtain determines the amount in controversy;⁷⁸ and, except where statutes require the amount to be determined on specified items in certain cases, see infra § 57, all the relief demanded must be considered in order to determine the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.⁷⁹ The matter in dispute from which the amount in controversy is to be determined for jurisdictional purposes varies according to the nature of the case and the relief demanded. It may be the debt or damages claimed, as in a case on a money demand or sounding in damages, see infra § 55; the value of property or of the possession thereof in cases involving the title or the right thereto, considered infra § 57; the value of a right hundred fifty dollars each, under the pretense of a judgment and execution against plaintiff, that plaintiff's credit was affected thereby in the sum of nine hundred fifty dollars, and that for the unlawful deprivation of the use of the horses and the expenses he lost forty five dollars, and praying for exemplary and actual damages, the amount in controversy is one thousand two hundred and ninety five dollars.—Parlin & Orendorff Implement Co. v. Clements, 117 S.W. 495, 54 Tex.Civ.App. 356.

Triple damages

The amount in controversy includes the amount of triple damages claimed in an action for unlawful detainer for the unlawful detention.—Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Co. v. Broad, 39 P.2d 241, 3 Cal.App. 2d 45.

Continuing account

Action for total amount of freight charges on various shipments was within jurisdiction of lower court, although no individual shipment was large enough.—New York N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Salter, 134 A. 230, 104 Conn. 728.

Unlawful discrimination between shippers

Suit for unlawful discrimination between shippers amounting to two dollars and fifty cents per car was within jurisdiction of circuit court, where total damages sought exceeded one hundred dollars.—Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Kirten Gravel Co., 44 S.W. 2d 674, 184 Ark. 1024.

claimed;⁸⁰ the value of the right to be protected, or the extent of the injury to be prevented, as in injunction suits;⁸¹ the diminished value of the property directly affected by the relief prayed;⁸² the value of the object sought, or of the erection to be abated, as in a suit to abate or enjoin a nuisance;⁸³ the value of property and rights which will be affected, if the relief prayed for is granted, rather than the value of complainant's interest;⁸⁴ the balance due, as in an action to recover the price of property sold;⁸⁵ the amount paid by the surety, and not the balance still due on the note, in an action by a surety on a note for reimbursement;⁸⁶ the amount of the salary of an office the title to which is in dispute;⁸⁷ the face value of a life insurance policy, in a suit to set aside a forfeiture thereof;⁸⁸ the amount of the judgment, in a suit to restrain a levy under a writ of execution;⁸⁹ or in an action to cancel contracts to purchase property and to recover amounts paid thereon, the amount sought to be recovered together with the balance due on the contracts is the amount in controversy.⁹⁰

In a garnishment proceeding, neither the total amount owed by the debtor nor the value of the property of the debtor in the hands of the garnishee constitutes the amount in controversy where the debt sought to be collected in the garnishment proceeding is less than either.⁹¹ In a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment of another court, the amount of any damage sought by plaintiff cannot be considered in determining the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.⁹²

Replevin. In replevin, if the writ is issued as a means of trying the title to property, the value of the article replevied is the matter in dispute, see infra § 57; but if the replevin is of property distrained for rent, the amount for which avowry is made is the real matter in dispute,⁹³ and damages claimed are not to be considered in determining the court's jurisdiction.⁹⁴

Tax cases. In an action to enjoin the collection or enforcement of a tax or assessment, the amount of the tax or assessment is the amount of the con-

To file compensation claim

In a suit by an employee to cancel a settlement for workmen's compensation so as to leave him free to file his claim for compensation before the Industrial Accident Board, the amount involved is the difference between the amount he was entitled to under the compensation law and what he had received under the alleged fraudulent settlement.—Maryland Casualty Co. v. Meyer, Tex.Civ. App., 41 S.W.2d 291, 293, citing Corpus Juris.

In suit for partnership accounting, the amount in controversy cannot exceed the aggregate of the amounts claimed by each partner to be due him from the other. The court held that it was not convinced that reason would justify the general application of the rule that in an action for a partnership accounting the whole of the common property constitutes the amount in controversy, which rule was laid down without particular examination of the question in the case of Rogers v. Lawton, C.C.Wis., 162 F. 203.—Mull v. Parrott Bros. Co., D.C.Idaho, 218 F. 713.

Promise not to engage in business

In a suit to enjoin defendant from engaging in business in a specified area in accordance with his agreement on the sale of his business to plaintiff, the amount in controversy is the value of the promise not to engage in business in the territory described and not the value of the entire property sold.—Horwitz v. Wohlmuth, 66 Pa.Super. 321.

82. Pa.—Pennington v. Conway & Ash, 92 Pa.Super. 149.

To restrain construction

On a bill in equity to restrain the erection and maintenance of a building or other structure, the value of the matter in controversy is the difference between the value of the property with the building on it and its value without the building and deprived of the right to build and maintain it.—Pennington v. Conway & Ash, supra.

In action for balance of purchase price of corporate stock under contract which enabled the purchasers to relieve themselves of liability by paying the seller a stated sum on receipt of notice of the seller's perfection of title the amount in controversy is the balance of the purchase price of the stock where the purchasers never exercised their right to relieve themselves of liability by making the required payment.—Whims v. Marco, supra.

trover;⁹⁵ unless a contractual right of exemption is alleged to be violated, in which case the value of the right of exemption sought to be protected, and not of the individual tax or assessment claimed to be violative thereof, measures the jurisdiction.⁹⁶ Where the attack is directed at the tax itself rather than the liability of the complaining party, the test of jurisdiction is the amount of the total tax, and not the amount for which the individual taxpayer may be liable⁹⁷ or may have paid.⁹⁸ In license tax cases, the value of the right to conduct complainant's business free from the tax is the jurisdictional amount.⁹⁹

Protest fees. It has been held that in an action on a protested bill of exchange, where plaintiff is entitled to recover protest fees in addition to interest and costs, such fees may be considered in making up the jurisdictional amount,¹ but this has also been denied.²

An interest in a judgment to which plaintiff's counsel is entitled as a fee is a part of the judgment for the purpose of determining the amount in controversy in a suit to set aside an assignment thereof.³

On a motion to set aside an execution, the jurisdiction of the court as to the amount involved is regulated by the face of the execution.⁴

Recitals in an agreed statement of facts may amount to a concession that the value of a right in question is sufficient to give jurisdiction.⁵

b. Time as of Which Jurisdiction Determined

The amount in controversy at the time of the institution of the suit determines the jurisdiction of the court.

The jurisdiction of a court is determined by the amount in controversy at the time when the court is first called on to exercise jurisdiction, which in a trial court is the amount claimed at the time when the suit is instituted.⁶ So, where the action is commenced for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, jurisdiction is not affected by a delay in the trial resulting in damages or interest accruing to an extent making the entire amount exceed the jurisdictional amount,⁷ even though an amendment of the petition, which originally demanded a sum within the jurisdiction of the court, so as to include such interest, makes it state a claim beyond the jurisdictional limit.⁸ Conversely, damages suffered after the commencement of a suit cannot serve as a basis for the court's jurisdiction as respects the amount involved.⁹ In an action to recover installments due under a contract, installments not due cannot be considered in determining the jurisdictional amount.¹⁰

Necessity for rule

This is a wise and necessary rule; otherwise by the accrual of interest during the pendency of the action, especially in courts with congested calendars where much time must elapse before a trial can be had, the amount in controversy could easily outgrow the jurisdiction of the court, and the litigants would find further efforts barred from this court by limitation of jurisdiction and from other tribunals by limitation of time.—*Tappin v. § 55. — Amount Claimed in General

In general, in actions in which the relief sought is a sum of money the amount claimed in good faith by the plaintiff, and not the amount of the recovery, determines the amount in controversy.

In general, in an action in which the relief sought is a sum of money, as in an action on a money demand or sounding in damages, the amount claimed in good faith by plaintiff,¹¹ the same being well pleaded,¹² determines the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining the court's jurisdiction; and this ordinarily constitutes the amount for which, in the aspect of the case most favorable to plaintiff, judgment could be rendered on the facts set out.¹³ This amount is determined without reference to any defense or plea set up by defendant,¹⁴

In action against trustees of religious society in their individual and representative capacity to foreclose an assessment lien, where amount in controversy as against trustees in their personal capacity was less than five hundred dollars and no supporting lien was pleaded against them in their personal capacity, district court did not have jurisdiction of action against trustees in their personal capacity.—*Uvalde Rock Asphalt Co. v. Demurrer to part of claim

Where the amount sued for is within the jurisdiction of the court, jurisdiction is not lost by the sustaining of a demurrer to all of the petition except a part which sets forth a claim less in amount than the jurisdiction of the court.—Trustees of Graded Free Colored Common Schools of City of Mayfield v. Trustees of Graded Free White Common Schools of Mayfield, 203 S.W. 520, 180 Ky. 574, rehearing denied Board of Trustees of Graded Free Colored Common School of Mayfield v. and is not determined by the proof adduced during the trial of the case,¹⁵ or by the amount of the recovery;¹⁶ and even the fact that plaintiff made a mistake as to the amount due, and voluntarily admitted on the trial that an amount below the jurisdiction of the court was actually due, will not deprive the court of jurisdiction acquired under an original bona fide claim.¹⁷ If the amount claimed is such as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court, such jurisdiction is not defeated by the fact that the actual recovery is less than the jurisdictional amount;¹⁸ unless, as appears infra § 54, it appears that the original demand was fictitious or fraudulent; and except in jurisdictions in which, under the statutes in force therein, it is required in actions ex contractu,¹⁹ but not in tort actions,²⁰ that in a suit for a moneyed demand for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, if the judgment rendered is below the jurisdiction of the court, the judgment must be set aside and the cause dismissed,²¹ unless the amount was reduced by set-off successfully pleaded,²² or unless the plaintiff makes the required affidavit stating a sufficient cause why the jurisdictional amount was not recovered.²³

In a trial by the court without a jury, the fact that the court ignored all of the claims except one, which was for an amount below its minimum jurisdiction does not affect its jurisdiction of the case.²⁴

Sufficiency of affidavit

(1) The affidavit must state that the amount sued for is actually due.—First Nat. Bank of Gadsden v. Pinson, 17 So. 182, 105 Ala. 588.

(2) Plaintiff's affidavit stating "belief" of affiant that recovery should have been for a greater amount, was insufficient and not in compliance with Code 1907 § 5355.—Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Lawler, 104 So. 412, 218 Ala. 119.

Conclusiveness of affidavit

Where plaintiff recovers an amount below the jurisdiction of the court, the filing of an affidavit that an amount within the jurisdiction was due and would have been recovered but for failure of proof is conclusive, and prevents a dismissal of the action.—Bullock v. Mason, 69 So. 86, 194 Ala. 662.

24. Tex.—Fowler v. Small, Civ.App., 244 S.W. 1098.

§ 56. — Fictitious or Fraudulent Claims

A fictitious or fraudulent demand of an amount greater than the facts warrant will not confer jurisdiction; but it is presumed that the plaintiff acted in good faith and a mere failure to prove his claim will not show fraud so as to defeat the court's jurisdiction.

In order for the amount demanded in the pleading to confer jurisdiction, the demand must be made in good faith and not for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction.²⁵ If a fictitious or fraudulent demand of an amount greater than the facts warrant is made, it cannot avail to confer jurisdiction;²⁶ and where it appears that the amount claimed in the complaint was laid at an excessive sum in order fraudulently to confer jurisdiction the action should be dismissed.²⁷ However, the fact that certain items of damage were alleged for the fraudulent purpose of giving jurisdiction to the court will not defeat its jurisdiction if the other items alleged in the petition are sufficient in amount to sustain it.²⁸ A presumption exists that plaintiff acted in good faith with respect to the amount of his claim,²⁹ and the mere fact that he fails to establish every cause of action set forth in his complaint, or to recover the full amount claimed, is not of itself sufficient to show that his demand was fictitious or fraudulent so as to defeat the jurisdiction of the court.³⁰ What constitutes a colorable enlargement of a demand, where the law gives no fixed rule, depends on the facts of the particular case.³¹

Mode of raising objection. In some jurisdictions, fraud on the jurisdiction of the court, where it does not appear on the face of the pleadings, cannot be raised by exception;³² but in order to raise that question it must be specially pleaded and an issue thereon tried³³ and submitted, under proper instructions, to the jury.³⁴ In other jurisdictions, it has been held that the question of whether the demand of plaintiff for damages was colorable and exaggerated for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on the court is one for the court to decide;³⁵ and that if it is proper to submit it to a jury at all, the submission should be as to the facts bearing on the enlargement and separate from the merits.³⁶

Placing parties in statu quo on dismissal. In a proper case the court, on dismissing an action because of a misstatement as to the amount in con-

From plaintiff's evidence

Mistake as to measure of damages

The claim by a buyer who had paid in advance for the goods that he was entitled to recover from the seller for a shortage in the goods the highest market value, and not merely the contract price, was sufficiently meritorious to sustain the jurisdiction of the court, notwithstanding the insufficiency of the amount if he were allowed only the contract price.—C. R. Garner & Co. v. Riley, Tex.Civ.App., 238 S.W. 953.

Intent to evade limitations on jurisdiction is not sufficiently shown by the mere fact that plaintiff testified that an account for a sum under the jurisdictional limit was correct.

To establish plea

(1) To establish plea that plaintiff laid his damages excessively so as to confer jurisdiction, evidence must show not only that property was of value less than jurisdictional amount, but that value laid was for fraudulent purpose of conferring jurisdiction.—Stone v. Bare, Tex.Civ.App., 198 S.W. 1102.

(2) Allegations that specified items were claimed solely for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction and not in good faith are not sufficient, but the party must prove that allegation.—McKnight v. Washington Nat. Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 1072.

trovery, may make such order as is necessary to place the parties in statu quo.³⁷

§ 57. — Value of Property

In an action in which property or its possession is the matter in dispute, the value of such property or its possession is the amount in controversy.

Where the litigation involves property, or the title thereto, or some question necessarily affecting its enjoyment and possession, it is the value of the property itself rather than the amount of the claim of the contending parties which fixes the amount in controversy for the purpose of jurisdiction;³⁸ and the amount of a mortgage or lien covering the property cannot be used as a basis to determine jurisdiction or oust jurisdiction.³⁹ Under this rule, it has been held that the value of the property involved determines jurisdiction in actions to try the rights of property;⁴⁰ in ejectment;⁴¹ in actions to quiet title;⁴² in an action to remove a cloud from the title to land,⁴³ as a suit instituted for the purpose of protecting complainant's land from a lien asserted against it;⁴⁴ in bills to redeem mortgaged premises;⁴⁵ in a suit to prevent a threatened injury to the freehold;⁴⁶ in a suit to prevent the creation of an obligation which will have to be paid by taxation;⁴⁷ in a suit to prevent the execution of a judgment;⁴⁸ and value of property involved deter-

Effect of subsequent finding as to value

The court need not vacate a former order overruling a plea in abatement, when, on the trial, the jury finds the value of the property involved to be an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction; and defendant is not entitled to urge the objection, since the issue has already been tried and determined against him.—Vilbig v. Faison, Tex. Civ.App., 296 S.W. 669.

Water rights

In a suit concerning water rights, the thing in controversy is the right to the use of the water, and where that exceeded in value two thousand dollars, exclusive of interest and costs, a circuit court of the United States had jurisdiction.—Morris v. Bean, C.C.Mont., 146 F. 423, affirmed Bean v. Morris, 159 F. 651, 86 C.C.A. 519, affirmed 31 S.Ct. 703, 221 U.S. 485, 55 L.Ed. 821.

Sequestered property

The jurisdiction of the district court of suits for the trial of the rights of property levied on by virtue of a writ of sequestration is dependent on the value of the property levied on.—Vaughn v. Porter, Tex. Civ.App., 44 S.W.2d 1009.

Officer's valuation

(1) In the absence of any claim for damages or allegations of fraud, the officer's valuation fixes the jurisdiction of the court to which oath and bond of claimant to sequestered property shall be returned.—Vaughn v. Porter, supra—15 C.J. p 761 note 3 [a] (1).

(2) Where the return did not show the value of property levied on, which plaintiff was claiming, but the sheriff made an indorsement on the replevy bond given by plaintiff, stating that he assessed the value of the property at two hundred twenty-two dollars and fifty cents, and it was agreed that such was its value, court properly overruled a motion to dismiss, on the ground that the value of the property in controversy was less than two hundred dollars.—Watson v. Schultz, Tex.Civ.App., 208 S.W. 953.

(3) The provision requiring the levying officer to return the writ to the district court and giving that court jurisdiction to try the claim, if the property is valued by the levying officer at any amount in excess of five hundred dollars, applies where the property is claimed by a person who is not a party to the writ, and not where he is the party alleged by plaintiff to be in possession of the property, in which case the valuation alleged by plaintiff determines the jurisdiction of the court.—Automobile Underwriters of America v. Brooks, Tex.Civ.App., 228 S.W. 367.

Contra

A suit to remove a cloud on title to land will not be dismissed because the value of the land exceeds the court's jurisdiction where there was no allegation in the complaint as to the value of the land or defendant's interest therein, and defendant's answer and cross complaint showed that his only interest was a lien for less than the jurisdictional amount.—Borman v. Apter, 110 A. 453, 95 Conn. 66.

44. Mich.—Matteson v. Matteson, 93 N.W. 1079, 132 Mich. 516.

Sale for assessment

In an action to enjoin the sale of real estate in satisfaction of an assessment, the value of the land and not the alleged amount due on the assessment determines the court's jurisdiction.—Fuller v. City of Grand Rapids, 40 Mich. 395.

45. Conn.—Scripture v. Johnson, 3 Conn. 211—Wheat v. Griffin, 4 Day 419.

47. Mich.—Dodge v. Van Buren Circuit Judge, 76 N.W. 315, 118 Mich. 189.

Amount of taxes immaterial

The question of jurisdictional amount in suit to enjoin delivery of municipal bonds which, if delivered, will have to be paid by taxation, depends, not on the amount of taxes plaintiff will have to pay, but on the value of his property subject to taxation.—Dodge v. Van Buren Cir. Judge, supra.

48. Mich.—Willeke v. Duross, 107 N.W. 907, 144 Mich. 243, 115 Am.S.R. 394.

To set aside judgment

In a suit to set aside a judgment under which execution was levied on real estate, the court has jurisdiction where the value of the land is sufficient, although the amount of the judgment is insufficient.—Willeke v. Duross, supra.

To enjoin execution on homestead

Where a homestead is seized, and the seizure is enjoined, the value of the homestead is the amount in dispute, and not the amount of the judgment sought to be executed; and mines jurisdiction in replevin,⁴⁹ where the writ is issued as a means of trying the title to the property;⁵⁰ and in actions for conversion.⁵¹ Also, where property, title to which is claimed by a third person, is seized under a court order, the value of the property tests the jurisdiction of the court, and where it exceeds the jurisdiction of the seizure court, claimant must go into the court having jurisdiction according to amount.⁵²

Property indirectly involved. Where property is only indirectly involved, its value will not be considered in determining the jurisdiction of the court.⁵³ Thus, in an action to recover rent, the title to the premises is a collateral matter, although proof thereof may be required, and jurisdiction is fixed by the amount of rent demanded;⁵⁴ and in an action to compel the refunding of part of a tax exacted under an excessive assessment, the refund claimed, and not the value of the property on which the tax was levied, governs in determining the jurisdiction of the court.⁵⁵

Value of possession. Where the issue in a case is not the ownership of property, but the right of possession thereof, it is the value of the right of possession, and not the value of the property, which determines the question of jurisdiction of the court.⁵⁶ Thus, in a replevin action in which the controversy is over the right to possession, the title to the property involved not being in dispute, plaintiff seeking damages for unlawful detention and defendants claiming a lien on the property, the value of the property is not a part of the amount in controversy.⁵⁷ In an action to determine merely the right of possession of realty, the value of the right of possession alone determines the amount involved,⁵⁸ with such actual damages as the complaint shows plaintiff entitled to recover.⁵⁹ Under some statutes, in proceedings to eject a tenant, the amount of the monthly or yearly rental determines the jurisdiction of the courts.⁶⁰

To set aside conveyances or transfers as fraudulent. It has been held that, in actions to set aside conveyances or transfers as fraudulent, the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes is the value of the property transferred;⁶¹ but there is also authority for the view that in a judgment creditor's suit jurisdiction is determined by the amount claimed by the creditor rather than by the value of the the injunction suit must be filed in a court other than that of the seizure, if the latter court has not jurisdiction.—Speyrer v. Miller, 32 So. 524, 108 La. 204, 61 L.R.A. 781.

Finding that piano sought to be replevied had value under three hundred dollars, bringing suit within municipal court's jurisdiction, was not supported by evidence.—Harnwell v. Hollenberg Music Co., 13 S. W.2d 297, 178 Ark. 98.

Money damage demanded

(1) The jurisdiction of the city court of the city of New York in actions of replevin is not circumscribed by the amount of money damage demanded in the complaint, but is based on the value of the chattels sought to be recovered.—Scharfman

v. May-Claire Costume Co., 232 N.Y. S. 516, 133 Misc. 482.

(2) In replevin, the jurisdiction of the court depends on the value of the property involved, and a demand for damages for the unlawful detention of the goods will not affect the jurisdiction, even though the total judgment, for the value of the goods and for damages for their unlawful detention, is an amount in excess of the jurisdictional limit of the court.—*Goldstein v. property held by the debtor's alleged fraudulent assignee.⁶²

Actions to have title papers declared mortgages. In a proceeding to have title papers to personalty declared chattel mortgages, the amount of the debts secured by the mortgages, and not the value of the property covered thereby, determines the amount in controversy.⁶³

Actions to enforce liens. As a general rule, in actions to enforce liens the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes is determined by the amount demanded.⁶⁴ In Texas, in an action to enforce a lien on personal property the matter in controversy is not only the debt, but also the property covered by the lien,⁶⁵ and, dependant on whichever er is the greater in the particular case,⁶⁶ the amount in controversy, for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the court, is either the value of the property on which the lien is sought to be enforced,⁶⁷ or the amount of the debt sought to be collected,⁶⁸ except in cases where the lien is fixed by statute, and is limited in its operation to only so much of the property as is necessary to satisfy the judgment, in which case, the court's jurisdiction is determined by the amount of the debt and not the value of the property on which the lien exists.⁶⁹ The rule does not apply to cases in which the creation of the lien is dependent on the filing of the suit and the subsequent levy of a writ.⁷⁰ However, it has been held, that where the amount of the debt is within the jurisdiction of the court, but the value

Glover, 65 S.W. 379, 27 Tex.Civ.App. 483, relating to a laborer's lien, on the ground that it is based on the mistaken assumption that the statute providing for the laborer's lien contains a restriction similar to that stated in the text.

70. Tex.—Graham Fuel Oil Co. v. Young County Oil Syndicate, Civ. App., 242 S.W. 1114.

Attachment

Value of property does not determine amount in controversy in action in which the lien is created by an attachment issued after, or at the time of, the filing of the suit.—Graham of the property covered by the lien is beyond its jurisdiction, the court may retain the cause for trial of the issue as to the alleged debt and receive a verdict and render judgment thereon, but it cannot foreclose the lien.⁷¹

Cancellation of notes and mortgages. In a suit to cancel a note and chattel mortgage given to secure its payment the amount in controversy as respects the jurisdiction of the court is either the amount of the note or the value of the property covered by the chattel mortgage, depending on which is the greater in amount.⁷² However, in a suit to cancel notes secured by chattel mortgages, or, in the alternative, for judgment for a stated amount for conversion of a part of the security, if it appears that such security was not accepted in payment of the notes, the amount of the notes sought to be canceled or the amount for which judgment for conversion of the security is demanded is the amount in controversy and not the value of the property covered by the mortgages securing the notes.⁷³

Value of property and damages. In some jurisdictions, in actions for the recovery of property and damages for its detention, the value of the property and the damages claimed may be added in determining the jurisdictional amount.⁷⁴ In other jurisdictions, if either the demand or the value of the property involved does not exceed a stated amount, a specified court has jurisdiction.⁷⁵ In still other jurisdictions, jurisdiction in such actions depends exclusively on the value of the chattels regardless of the damages.⁷⁶ Where, however, damages for the detention of property are not allowable in an action of trover, jurisdiction of such an action depends on the value of the property regardless of the damages claimed.⁷⁷

Actions by stockholders. It appears to be well established that where a stockholder sues in the right of the corporation, the amount in controversy, for jurisdictional purposes, is the value of the right of the corporation which it is sought to protect and not the value of the complainant's interest therein.⁷⁸ So, also, where a suit is brought by the owners of landholders' shares in a cemetery, on behalf of themselves and all other owners of such shares similarly situated, to protect the interests of the land of the corporation as against a proposed sale, the aggregate interest of the whole class constitutes the matter in dispute,⁷⁹ and in a suit by a stockholder on behalf of himself and other stockholders to secure the distribution of a fund belonging to a dissolved corporation, the entire fund is the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.⁸⁰ It has also been held that in a suit by a member of a non-stock corporation to restrain alleged illegal and ultra vires acts by its governing body, the amount involved, for jurisdictional purposes, is the value of the rights of the corporation sought to be protected.⁸¹ On the other hand, where a stockholder sues in his own right, asserting rights adverse to the corporation, the value of his stock and not the value of the corporate assets, governs.⁸²

Applications for receivership. Although it has been held that in an action by a stockholder of a corporation for the appointment of a receiver and the winding up of the corporation, the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes is the value of plaintiff's stock,⁸³ there is also authority for the view that in a suit for a receivership and the distribution of assets the value of the entire assets to be seized, rather than plaintiff's interest in them is the amount in controversy.⁸⁴ It has also been held that, on an application by creditors of a corporation for a receiver, the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes is the amount of the assets of the corporation and not the claims of the creditors.⁸⁵

A bill to compel a corporation to transfer corporate stock and to pay the difference between the market value of the stock on the day that transfer was demanded and its highest market value between that day and the day of judgment, alleging that the corporation refused to transfer the stock, which was subject to an inheritance tax under state law, until a waiver or consent to the transfer from the state was produced, has been held not within the jurisdiction of a federal court, where the amount of the tax was less than the minimum jurisdictional amount, although the market value of the stock greatly exceeded that amount.⁸⁶

§ 58. — Interest

In general, accrued interest may be added to the principal of a claim in the determination of the amount in controversy, unless the law fixes the jurisdiction at a certain amount exclusive of interest.

Where the law does not expressly exclude interest in making up the jurisdictional amount, interest due upon the amount involved at the time the action was brought may be added to determine the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes;⁸⁷ but interest which might be allowed for the time elapsing between the bringing of the action and the judgment is too speculative and indefinite to be so considered,⁸⁸ and, as appears supra § 54 b, cannot, under the rule requiring jurisdiction to be determined as of the time when the suit is instituted, be considered. So accrued interest may be added to a claim to bring it within the jurisdiction of a court,⁸⁹ except that where a statute gives the court jurisdiction only in cases where the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to a certain sum, the addition of interest to a debt originally beneath the jurisdiction of the court, cannot of course confer jurisdiction thereon.⁹⁰ Also a court cannot take cognizance of an action where interest is demanded and such interest raises the amount sought to be recovered above the jurisdiction of the court, although without interest the demand would be within its jurisdiction,⁹¹ unless the law fixes the jurisdiction of the court at a certain amount exclusive of interest.⁹² In some jurisdictions statutory and constitutional provisions limiting the jurisdiction of specified courts to stated amounts, exclusive of interest, are construed as applying only to interest eo nomine, that is, interest in its own name, which the statutes make provision for or the party binds himself by contract to pay, so that when interest is sought, which is expressly authorized by statute or which flows from and is incident to the written contract sued on, it will not be considered as a part of the amount in controversy in determining the jurisdiction of the court;⁹³ but where interest is

In general attorney's fees claimed as a part of the specific demand sued for are considered in determining the amount in controversy, but if they are allowable only as costs they are not ordinarily so considered.

Ownership of fees

Where there is a contractual obligation to pay attorney's fees, the right to claim those fees, in the event of the happening of the contingency upon which they are made to depend, belongs to the person in whose favor the main obligation runs and not to his attorney, and thus such fees actually become a part of the claim, and, in the absence of statute prohibiting it, are to be taken into account in determining jurisdiction.—Foundation Finance Co. v. Robbins, La.App., 144 So. 293.

Fees not a penalty

Where an agreement contains a stipulation for the payment of attorney's fees, those fees are to be considered as representing a part of the damage which noncompliance by the obligor will inflict upon the obligee and not as a penalty upon the obligor. The moving consideration for the inclusion of the said stipulation is not punishment of the obligor for his failure to comply with his agreement, but rather repayment to the obligee of any loss he may sustain.—Foundation Finance Co. v. Robbins, supra.

As special damages

Attorney's fees provided in note sued on are special damages.—Taylor v. Datig, 11 P.2d 98, 123 Cal.App. Supp. 782.

Attorney's fees allowed

(1) Attorney's fees allowed by statute in action to recover on life insurance policy.—Johnson v. Universal Life & Accident Ins. Co., 94 S.W.2d 1145, 127 Tex. 425—National torney's fees expressly stipulated for in a note are a part of the amount in controversy in a suit on such note, even though the stipulation is void under a statute,⁹⁸ although this has been denied.⁹⁹ A claim for attorney's fees not provided for in the contract and not recoverable under the statute cannot be added to the amount in controversy so as to give the district court jurisdiction,¹ and in an action for damages a claim for attorney's fees which are not allowable by law in such actions cannot be added to the amount in controversy so as to give the court jurisdiction;² nor, where the statute gives the right to collect attorney's fees as a penalty for failing to pay a legal demand, can such amount be considered in determining the jurisdiction of the case.³

Where attorney's fees are not demanded, although expressly stipulated for in the instrument sued on, they are not included in the amount in controversy.⁴

In a suit to cancel notes, instituted before their maturity, attorney's fees, although expressly stipulated for, are not included as a part of the amount in controversy.⁵

Attorney's fees allowed as costs. In general attorney's fees which are allowable only as costs are not to be taken into consideration in determining the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes;⁶ but, under a statute which allows attorney's fees as a part of the general recovery sought so that they enter into and become a part of the amount sued for, attorney's fees are taken into consideration in determining the jurisdiction of the court, even though the statute authorizing their recovery also provides that they shall be taxed as part of the costs.⁷

§ 60. — Costs

In general, costs, including protest fees, do not constitute a part of the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes; but where they are included in a judgment which is the subject of another and independent suit they are a part of the amount in controversy.

Costs are an incident to a judicial proceeding, and not a part of the recovery claimed, in such sense as to be considered in determining the amount in controversy as bearing on the jurisdiction of the court.⁸ However, costs included in a judgment which is made the subject of another and independent suit constitute a part of the amount in controversy in the latter suit.⁹

Protest fees are taxable costs, in an action in a federal court on a promissory note or bill of exchange, and cannot be considered as part of the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.¹⁰

(2) Where the statute limits the jurisdictional value of matters that may be litigated in a court of record to a sum stated, exclusive of interest and costs, the "costs" referred to are those fees and charges that are ordinarily allowed in such actions and such other items as are legally and specifically made by statute a part of the costs that may be recovered as such in a case.—State v. § 61. — Demand of Exemplary or Special Damages

In determining the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes, exemplary or punitive damages should be included where they are claimed in a tort action, but not where claimed in a contract action. The authorities are in conflict as to whether double damages or other statutory allowances should be considered.

Where exemplary or punitive damages are claimed in an action of tort, such damages should be included in determining the jurisdictional amount,¹¹ provided such damages are properly pleaded,¹² and unless the facts pleaded are on their face insufficient to sustain a claim for such damages.¹³ However, it has been held that such damages are excluded from the determination in contract actions,¹⁴ but there is authority to the contrary.¹⁵ Double damages or other statutory allowances of extra damages, according to some authorities, should be excluded in computing the jurisdictional amount as indicated by the real amount in controversy;¹⁶ but a contrary view has also been asserted.¹⁷

§ 62. — Actions on Bonds

In an action on a penal bond there is a conflict of authority as to whether it is the amount of the damages claimed or the penalty of the bond which determines the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes, which conflict may be reconciled on the basis that it is the obligation of the obligor, or the obligor's liability under the bond, as measured by the penalty therein which controls; and, according to the facts of the particular case, this may be the amount claimed or the penalty of the bond.

It has been held that in an action on a penal bond it is the amount of the damages claimed, and not the penalty of the bond, which determines jurisdiction, the damages being the real amount in controversy and the penalty being regarded as in the nature of collateral security for the debt;¹⁸ but there is also authority for the view that the penalty of the bond is the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining jurisdiction.¹⁹ This apparent conflict may be reconciled by a distinction, which the cases do not always make clear, based on the nature of the bond and the judgment which must be entered in the action, and it is believed that the correct rule may be stated as follows: It is not the amount of any individual claim nor the aggregate of all claims, but it is the obligation of the obligor, or the obligor's liability under the bond, as measured by the penalty therein;²⁰ and the amount of damages sought to be recovered controls where a judgment recovered for that amount, although different from the penalty of the bond, determines the entire liability of the obligors;²¹ but the amount named as the penalty of the bond controls where the nature of the bond is such, or the practice with relation to such actions requires, that judgment must be entered for the full penalty of the bond²² to be discharged on payment of the damages²³ or to stand as security for further breaches, the remedy therefor being by scire facias.²⁴

In an action on a forthcoming bond the amount in controversy is the amount of plaintiff's claim against the property, and not the value of the property.²⁵

§ 63. — Joinder of Demands or Causes of Action

The amounts involved in causes of action which cannot properly be joined in one action cannot be aggregated for the purpose of determining the court's jurisdiction; but where such causes of action can properly be joined and they concern and affect all the parties litigant it is held in some jurisdictions that they can, and in other jurisdictions that they cannot, be so aggregated.

In order that two or more claims may be united to make the jurisdictional amount, they must belong to a class that under the statute will permit them to be properly joined in one suit, and not such as should be made the subject of independent suits;²⁶ and where two or more causes of action are improperly united in one suit the amounts involved in the different causes cannot be added together so as to make an amount in controversy sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court in which the suit is brought,²⁷ either by improperly joining demands or causes of action each of which is below the jurisdictional amount,²⁸ or by joining a demand or cause of action below the jurisdiction of the court with a demand or cause of action of which the court has jurisdiction.²⁹

In so far as causes of action which may properly be joined are concerned, and which concern all the parties litigant, there is, however, a lack of harmony on the question of whether or not their various amounts should be aggregated in order to determine the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes. In some jurisdictions the amount of each separate demand or cause of action and not the aggregate of various causes which may be joined in one action determines the jurisdictional amount;³⁰ so that where the claims are substantive and are not in their nature joint or composite and do not arise out of the same transaction, circumstances, or occurrences, and are not consequent upon a continuous course of dealing as evidenced by an open account or a continuing contract, and are in no way related, but represent distinct and wholly independent demands,³¹ whether ex contractu or ex delicto,³² they cannot be aggregated to confer jurisdiction.

Assigned claims

Claims of miners against their employer for coal mined are separate causes of action, and when no single claim exceeds one hundred dollars, they cannot be grouped together by a common assignee so as to bring the amount within the jurisdictional limits of the circuit court.—Paris Mercantile Co. v. Hunter, 86 S.W. 808, 74 Ark. 615.

Notes of a series

In a suit on notes, each given for parts of the same obligation, the separate demand on each note, and not the aggregate amount, determines the jurisdiction of the court.—Schneider v. Fairmon, 194 S.W. 251, 128 Ark. 425—American Soda Fountain Co. v. Battle & Waddle, 107 S.W. 672, 85 Ark. 213, motion for modification of opinion denied 108 S.W. 508, 85 Ark. 213—Brooks v. Hornberger, 94 S.W. 708, 78 Ark. 595.

Open account and notes under contract

In an action on an open account and on nine notes given for installments, on sale of a set of law reports, each note and the open account constitute the basis of a separate cause of action.—Edward Thompson Co. v. Henson, 219 S.W. 27, 142 Ark. 504.

Items of damage under single cause of action

In an action for damages for the breach of a single contract for the sale of several carloads of fruit, the amount in controversy is the aggregate of the damages demanded, and separate items specified for damages on each of the cars do not constitute separate causes of action each of which must be within the jurisdiction of the court.—Coyne Bros. v. Fenzel, 195 S.W. 391, 129 Ark. 163.

tion. Thus, in such jurisdictions, the jurisdictional amount cannot be made up by joining two or more separate demands or causes of action each of which is below the jurisdictional amount;³³ nor can a demand or cause of action of an amount below the jurisdiction of a court be brought within its jurisdiction by joining it in an action on a demand for which the court has jurisdiction.³⁴ Also an inferior court has jurisdiction of an action on several demands, each within the jurisdictional amount, although the total of the demands exceeds the jurisdiction of the court.³⁵

On the other hand, in other jurisdictions it is held that the amount in controversy for the purpose of determining the court's jurisdiction is the aggregate amount of all of the causes of action properly joined,³⁶ which concern and affect all the parties to the litigation,³⁷ and which are capable of the same character of relief,³⁸ except that actions ex contractu cannot be joined with actions ex delicto,³⁹ and notwithstanding some or all of the claims have been assigned to plaintiff⁴⁰ for collection only,⁴¹ although as to the latter some courts hold that such claims cannot be aggregated for the purpose of making up the jurisdictional amount.⁴² If two or more causes of actions involving the same parties are joined in one action the court will have jurisdiction of a cause below its jurisdictional minimum if one or more of the causes in the action is for an amount within its jurisdiction,⁴³ or if the cause for an amount below the jurisdictional minimum is properly joined with a cause which, although not for the recovery of a pecuniary amount, is within the jurisdiction of the court.⁴⁴

Simultaneous cancellation of several insurance policies

Complaint, in action against insurance company for damages, alleging that defendant simultaneously canceled three policies on plaintiff's life, issued at different dates and for different amounts, constituted single cause of action for purpose of determining whether amount prayed for was within superior court's jurisdiction.—Chamberlain v. Character of ownership immaterial

Jurisdiction of superior court is not dependent on character of plaintiff's ownership of chose in action, it being sufficient if plaintiff has capacity to sue, and aggregate amount demanded is within jurisdiction.—Hammell v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 17 P.2d 101, 217 Cal. 5.

Injunction

Action to recover excess charges for electricity of an amount below the jurisdiction of the court and to enjoin future overcharges and discontinuance of service for failure to pay overcharges should not be dismissed where the court is the only

If, however, the suit is primarily one to establish a money claim and writs of injunction and mandamus prayed for are merely incidental thereto, the amount of the claim must determine the jurisdiction of the court.⁴⁵

Joint or composite causes of action. If the demands from their nature or character are joint or composite, or are in some way related to each other, or arise out of the same transaction, circumstance, or occurrence, they may be aggregated to confer jurisdiction.⁴⁶ Thus a person who honestly possesses a demand which was made up at one time of several items, each of which is below the minimum jurisdiction of the court in which he sues, is not precluded from prosecuting his claim in such court, when its sum total is of sufficient amount to enable the court to entertain it.⁴⁷

Joinder of causes of action on notes not due. Where action is brought by a creditor, in good faith, on several notes, some of which are not yet due, because of intended fraud on the part of the debtor, and all of the notes aggregate the requisite jurisdictional amount, the court has jurisdiction, although the amount of the notes which are past due is less than the jurisdictional amount.⁴⁸

Separate counts. Where there are several counts in one declaration, each setting up different items for which judgment is claimed, jurisdiction depends on the aggregate amount claimed in the different counts;⁴⁹ but they cannot be so aggregated where the several counts are resorted to merely to state the same cause of action in various ways.⁵⁰

Claim for statutory penalty. In an action for a claim and for a statutory penalty authorized to be collected in connection therewith, the two items may be added together to determine the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.⁵¹

one having jurisdiction to grant a writ of injunction.—Bland v. City of Hearne, supra.

(1) Action for amount below minimum jurisdiction of the court and for mandamus to secure its payment will be dismissed where another court which has jurisdiction of the amount sued for also has power to issue writs of mandamus in cases involving amounts within its jurisdiction.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Bryan, Tex.Civ.App., 198 S. W. 342, error refused.

(2) Action against administrator on claims aggregating less than jurisdictional amount was not brought within superior's court's jurisdiction by prayer for injunctive relief, where complaint merely alleged on information and belief that plaintiff, in case of distribution, would be unable to receive payment and was without legal remedy.—*Merrill v. "Demand" construed

The word "demand," as used in the organic limitations as to jurisdiction, means the amount of a claim that may properly be and is duly put in controversy by the plaintiff. The "demand" referred to in Const. art 5 § 18, is single, and does not authorize the joinder of distinct, substantive causes of action to confer jurisdiction.—Burkhart v. Gowin, 98 So. 140, 86 Fla. 376.

Items of account

Where an action was brought to recover an alleged amount due for board of employees of defendant railroad company under a contract between plaintiff and the company, and orders given by such employees on the company were only offered as evidence to establish the different items of the account, which exceeded one hundred dollars in amount, the circuit court had jurisdiction although none of the orders was for an amount greater than one hundred dollars.—*St. Louis, etc., R. § 64. — Joinder of Parties

In actions by or against several parties whose claims or liabilities are joint, the total claims or liabilities determine the jurisdictional amount in controversy; but where the interests of the plaintiffs are several their claims are not aggregated to determine the amount in controversy, nor, it is generally held, can the several liabilities of different defendants be so aggregated.

In an action by several parties who sue jointly for the recovery of money or property, claiming under one common right or undivided interest, even though their claims are separable as between themselves, the aggregate sum of their several claims determines the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes;⁵² and in some jurisdictions the same is true where several plaintiffs sue the same defendant or defendants in one action to recover for individual injuries arising out of the same occurrence.⁵³ Also the total liability of two or more persons who are jointly and not severally liable in one and the same suit is the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.⁵⁴ However, it is only where there is a common or general interest in the subject matter of the controversy or the relief sought of which the court has jurisdiction that it may exercise jurisdiction over separate claims of different parties, each of which is for an amount less than that required to give jurisdiction.⁵⁵ Where several controversies between several litigants, which are legally distinct, are included all in one cause or suit or connected together for trial and each considered separately, the mere joining of them does not destroy the jurisdiction of the court in the event the two distinct and separate sums sued for by separate litigants would, when combined, exceed in amount the jurisdiction of the court.⁵⁶ The distinct and separate claims of several plaintiffs, whose individual causes of action are properly joined in one action, cannot be aggregated for the purpose of determining the jurisdictional amount;⁵⁷ nor can the several liabilities of different defend-

Damages constituting community property

Husband and wife being jointly interested in total amount recovered in their action for damages suffered in collision between automobiles to extent that such amount belongs to community and its members equally, whether recovery be in their names jointly or individually, sum of amounts sought to be recovered by each determines superior court's jurisdiction.—*Frost v. ants whose individual liabilities on different causes of action are litigated in one action be so aggregated,⁵⁸ except that in some jurisdictions the aggregate amount of several causes of action brought by one plaintiff against different defendants is the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.⁵⁹ So, in actions to enforce separate lien claims of different lien claimants, it is the several amount of each claim, and not the aggregate sum of all in one suit, which determines jurisdiction,⁶⁰ although it has been held that in a petition by several lien holders attacking the appraisal and sale under a mortgage foreclosure the aggregate of the claims determines the jurisdictional amount.⁶¹ In some jurisdictions, in an action by several plaintiffs having separate and distinct demands, the jurisdiction of the court over each plaintiff's claim depends on the amount of such claim, independent of the amount involved in the other claims;⁶² and, where a several judgment is sought against several defendants in a single action, jurisdiction as to any one defendant is determined by the amount of the judgment claimed against him.⁶³ In other jurisdictions, the jurisdictional amount in controversy in actions

Amount stated in summons immaterial

Action by husband and wife

Under a statute which, although providing that rights of action by husband and wife to recover damages for injury to the wife should be redressed in one suit brought in the names of the husband and

Action by husband and wife for wife's injuries

(1) It has been held in an action brought by a husband and wife for injuries to the wife in which the husband adds claims in his own right, that where a bill of particulars shows that the damage sustained by the husband and for which he set up a claim in separate counts was below the jurisdiction of the court a demurrer to such counts should be sustained.—Walker v. Smith, 161 So. 551, 119 Fla. 430.

(2) On the other hand, in such an action the court has been held to have jurisdiction of the husband's claim where he set up two counts for damages for an amount less than the minimum jurisdictional amount cognizable by the court, and two counts for damages for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, where it could not be determined under which count verdict in favor of husband for less than jurisdictional amount was rendered.—*Miami Jockey Club v. Conversion and foreclosure

In an action against one defendant to foreclose a chattel mortgage and against another defendant for conversion of a part of the mortgaged property in which the allege-to enforce the separate claims of several plaintiffs is the highest claim of the various plaintiffs;⁶⁴ and the court has jurisdiction of joinable causes of action in favor of different plaintiffs, or against different defendants, where the largest claim is for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, even though others of the claims are for an amount below the jurisdictional minimum of the court.⁶⁵ Also, on interpleader involving an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, a claim by one defendant against another for an amount below the jurisdictional minimum of the court may be adjudicated.⁶⁶

tions for conversion are laid upon a distinct count, the failure of plaintiff to show jurisdiction in the court of the cause for foreclosure by his failure to allege the value of the property does not deprive the court of jurisdiction of the cause for conversion, the amount sued for on conversion being within the court's jurisdiction.—Knowles v. Gilmer State Bank, Tex.Civ.App., 298 S.W. 625.

Where one cause transferred

Where, in a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage and collect a note, plaintiffs alleged that third parties had converted a part of the mortgaged property, valued at two hundred and twenty-five dollars, and on plea of privilege the cause as to conversion was transferred to the county court of another county, plaintiffs' failure to allege the value of the mortgaged property in the original suit did not oust the county court of jurisdiction, where the balance of plaintiffs' debt was less than maximum jurisdictional amount.—Fussell & Irvin v. Mendenhall, 56 P.2d 498, 5 Cal.2d 749.

Action against stockholders

(1) Where a suit to enforce the unpaid subscriptions of corporate stock was brought by corporate creditors whose claims were large enough to give the court jurisdiction, the court had jurisdiction of the claims of other creditors whose claims were not large enough to give the court jurisdiction in the first instance, for the fund the creditors sought to subject was a trust fund held by the stockholder for the benefit of the creditors, having the right to subject it to the payment of their debts and to join in the same suit for that purpose.—Williams v. Chamberlain, 94 S.W. 29, 123 Ky. 150, 29 Ky.L. 606.

(2) It has been held that the stockholders being liable severally for corporation's debts, test of municipal court's jurisdiction is amount demanded from each stockholder, not sum of all demands in action.—Southwestern Portland Cement Co. v. Cochrane, 300 P. 445, 114 Cal.App. Supp. 778.

(3) Also it has been held in actions against stockholders for a corporate debt that, although the aggregate amount sought to be recovered from all exceeds the sum required to give jurisdiction, the court cannot take jurisdiction as to those against whom the claims do not amount to a sum sufficient for that purpose.

Creditor's suit

Where one complainant in a credi-

tor's suit in a federal court has recovered a judgment against defendant exceeding two thousand dollars in amount, other creditors holding judgments for smaller amounts may unite with him as complainants, or may intervene.—Huff v. Bidwell, Ga., 151 F. 563, 81 C.C.A. 43, affirming, C.C., 103 F. 362—Stanwood v. Wishard, C.C.Iowa, 134 F. 959.

Where the main controversy is within the jurisdiction of the court, it has been held permissible to bring in as defendants parties who are necessary to a complete determination of the controversy, although the amount involved with respect to such parties is beneath the jurisdiction of the court;⁶⁷ and it has been held that where a court has jurisdiction of an action it may permit one asserting a lien against defendant's property to become a party, although the amount of the lien is less than the minimum jurisdiction of the court.⁶⁸ A court which has jurisdiction of suits started therein is competor's suit in a federal court has recovered a judgment against defendant exceeding two thousand dollars in amount, other creditors holding judgments for smaller amounts may unite with him as complainants, or may intervene.—Huff v. Bidwell, Ga., 151 F. 563, 81 C.C.A. 43, affirming, C.C., 103 F. 362—Stanwood v. Wishard, C.C.Iowa, 134 F. 959.

Joining persons secondarily liable

(1) Effect of statute authorizing maker and any one secondarily liable on note to be joined and sued in same action is to confer on court having jurisdiction of amount put in controversy by plaintiff against principal debtor concomitant jurisdiction over guarantors, indorsers, or sureties who may be liable for all or any part of principal debt sued for.—State ex rel. Whyte v. Gray, 156 So. 493, 116 Fla. 510.

(2) Principal and surety on real estate broker's bond could be sued jointly in superior court, where recovery within jurisdictional amount was sought against principal, although recovery against surety was limited by bond to amount below jurisdictional minimum of court.—Kaufman v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 56 P.2d 504, 5 Cal.2d 761—Kane v. Mendenhall, 56 P.2d 498, 5 Cal.2d 749.

(3) County court at law has jurisdiction of demand against guarantor of two hundred dollar note in suit on that and three hundred dollar note.—Sheffield v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 298 S.W. 183.

tent to pass upon the priority of conflicting claims asserted by adverse parties to a fund from which satisfaction of the amount sued for is sought, notwithstanding such claims are sums in excess of the court's jurisdiction.⁶⁹

In an action by several taxpayers whose burdens as taxpayers may be increased by the doing of such act, to enjoin the threatened unauthorized act of an official, it is the value of the right sought to be protected from invasion by the doing of the unlawful act threatened, and not the interest of each separate complainant, as measured by the amount its burden of taxation will be increased, that determines the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes.⁷⁰

In a suit against a number of defendants to quiet title to a tract of land alleged to be of the jurisdictional value, in order to sustain the jurisdiction of the court it must appear from the bill that all the defendants have a privity of interest, derived from a common source of title, or that the separate claim of each defendant is of the jurisdictional amount, since, where the defendants claim separately, the suit is severable, and the requisite amount must be involved in each separate controversy.⁷¹

Where an action is brought in an inferior court against several defendants jointly, and the amount claimed from one of them is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, the court is without jurisdiction as to the entire case.⁷²

Where one sues on behalf of himself and others. Where one sues on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated who may join in the proceedings, the amount in controversy has been held to be the aggregate value of the interests of those who have joined in the suit, and not the value of the interests of the entire class;⁷³ but there is also authority for the view that under such circumstances the aggregate interest of the whole class constitutes the amount in controversy.⁷⁴ A statute providing that if a question involves a common or general interest of many persons, or, if the parties be numerous and it is impracticable to bring all before the court, one or more may sue for the benefit of all, does not confer jurisdiction irrespective of the amount in controversy, but only permits one or more of the proper parties to an action to sue or defend for all in the cases specified where the court has jurisdiction;⁷⁵ and the mere fact that separate claims of different parties, for money arise under a common title and involve the same questions of law and fact is not sufficient, where each claim is for an amount below the minimum jurisdictional requirement of the court, to confer jurisdiction so as to permit one party to sue or defend for all therein.⁷⁶ However, in an action by a party for himself and all other persons similarly situated to recover a tax or assessment illegally levied and collected the taxes or assessments illegally collected constitute a trust fund which is the subject matter of the suit, so that the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes is not merely the amount plaintiff is entitled to recover, but the aggregate interest of the whole class for whom suit is brought, that is, the total fund illegally collected,⁷⁷ and the same rule applies in an action by several policemen on behalf of a large number to recover pay for a period when they were illegally suspended.⁷⁸ jurisdiction does not extend to the entire claim; but where a claim has been split by the parties into several small claims, or they arise from separate transactions, a court whose jurisdiction extends only to the small claims may take jurisdiction of them.

Where a claim is in its character one and indivisible, jurisdiction cannot be conferred by splitting it up into smaller claims, each within a certain court's cognizance, while the claim as a unit is in excess thereof.⁷⁹ A claim may, however, be split by the consent of the parties into several claims so as to authorize several suits thereon in a court whose jurisdiction would not extend to the entire claim.⁸⁰

Where separate claims arise from separate transactions, distinct actions thereon may be brought in a court whose jurisdiction would not extend to a single action for the aggregate amount of such claims,⁸¹ even though the several claims were included in a single open account and a single action might have been brought thereon for the aggregate amount,⁸² unless the creditor has so dealt with the account as to show that he elected to make it but a single indebtedness.⁸³

Severance of claim from lien. A person suing on a claim secured by a lien may sever the claim from the lien, and sue only on the claim in a court whose jurisdiction extends to the claim in suit, but not to a foreclosure of the lien.⁸⁴

§ 66. Effect of Set-Off or Counterclaim

- a. With respect to plaintiff's action
- b. Jurisdiction as to set-off or counterclaim

a. With Respect to Plaintiff's Action

A set-off, counterclaim, or other cross action cannot increase or reduce the amount involved so as to oust the court of jurisdiction of the plaintiff's claim; but it may confer jurisdiction where the plaintiff's claim is insufficient, although it will not operate to reduce a plaintiff's claim which is in excess of the court's jurisdiction to an amount within its jurisdiction.

Where plaintiff sues in a court of general jurisdiction, defendant cannot oust the jurisdiction of the court by asserting a set-off or counterclaim, even though it be established, which is sufficient to reduce plaintiff's recovery below the minimum jurisdictional amount.⁸⁵ However, a counterclaim, plea in reconviction, or cross action for a sufficient amount,⁸⁶ or a cross complaint which, because of

Case seemingly contra.

An exception to the first city court's jurisdiction on the ground that plaintiff divided his claim to give jurisdiction was held properly overruled, where the amount demanded was within the court's jurisdiction, seemingly on the basis that it did not appear otherwise than that plaintiff had remitted the excess of his claim above the court's jurisdiction, and, even if it was as defendant alleged, the supervisory jurisdiction of the supreme court and not that of the courts of appeal should have been invoked.—Gitz & Geier v. Carroll, 121 So. 779, 9 La. App. 631.

Notes of series

Cause of action for indebtedness payable in installments, represented by notes, which became single matured obligation at same time because of acceleration agreement, could not be divided into two suits in order to confer jurisdiction on court.—Kearney v. Fenerty, 171 So. 57, 185 La. 862.

Rent

Plaintiff may not, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on an inferior court, bring separate actions for rent due on the same premises for different months.—Cornella v.

V. Booraem's Estate v. Lubow, 1 A.2d 35, 120 N.J.Law 575.

Single account for separate buildings

Materialman charging materials furnished for four separate buildings to contractor in one account could not treat claims as to each building as separate indebtedness so as to be able to bring separate suits, for alleged balances, within jurisdiction of city court.—Bargain Lumber Yard v. 15 C.J. p 774 note 12.

To try counterclaim

In an action for an amount below the minimum jurisdiction of the court wherein defendant filed a coun-

the nature of the claim, is within the jurisdiction of the court,⁸⁷ may confer jurisdiction where plaintiff's claim is insufficient for the purpose; although there is also authority for the view that where plaintiff's bill in an action involving specific property failed to show the value of the property, a plea in reconvention claiming damages in an amount within the court's jurisdiction would not confer jurisdiction.⁸⁸ If plaintiff sues in a court of limited jurisdiction, the amount of a set-off, counterclaim, or cross action asserted by defendant cannot be added to plaintiff's claim to oust the jurisdiction of the court, but each will be considered separately;⁸⁹ nor will the assertion of a set-off or counterclaim in excess of the jurisdiction of the court oust the jurisdiction with respect to the claim asserted in the complaint, that being within the jurisdiction.⁹⁰ Where the action is originally brought for an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the court, jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the assertion of a set-off or counterclaim, even though successful, sufficient in amount to reduce the original claim to a sum within the jurisdictional limit;⁹¹ but under a statute which confers jurisdiction where the debt, balance, or other matter in dispute does not exceed a stated amount, a court has jurisdiction if an admitted counterclaim reduces the amount originally claimed by plaintiff to an amount within its jurisdictional limits.⁹²

b. Jurisdiction as to Set-Off or Counterclaim

In general a court which has jurisdiction of the plaintiff's claim has jurisdiction of an offset, although it is below the court's minimum jurisdiction; but it does not have jurisdiction of an offset or cross demand which exceeds its maximum jurisdiction.

Although there is authority to the contrary,⁹³ the general rule is that where the cause of action set up by the complaint in a court is such as to give the court jurisdiction, it has also jurisdiction to adjudicate with respect to a set-off, counterclaim, or cross complaint asserted by defendant, although the amount thereof is not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction in an independent action thereon;⁹⁴ but terclaim for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the court has jurisdiction to try the counterclaim.—Moline Plow Co. v. Adair, 183 P. 499, 76 Okl. 4.

Sounding in equity

Where case stated in complaint is not within jurisdiction of superior court, but defendant sets up cross complaint sounding in equity, and hence within jurisdiction of superior court, such court has jurisdiction of both causes of action.—*Emery v. Counterclaim failing to state cause of action

That defendant asked for judgment in his favor in excess of the court's jurisdiction in counterclaim did not operate to oust the court of jurisdiction to determine plaintiff's cause of action for less than that amount, where counterclaim failed to state cause of action for recovery of any amount.—Jefferson Gardens v. Terzan, 257 N.W. 154, 216 Wis. 230.

Effect of amendment

Where court acquired jurisdiction of the parties and over the separate causes of action in the complaint and defendant's counterclaims as first interposed, an amendment to a counterclaim increasing the amount involved to an excess of the statutory limit of the civil court's jurisdiction could not affect its jurisdiction to proceed with the matter still properly before it.—*Sells v. Affirmative relief

(1) Plaintiff's cause of action for foreclosure of a mortgage for a small debt being within the jurisdiction of the superior court, defendant might have affirmative relief on a counterclaim to an amount not jurisdictional.—Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Burger, 107 S.E. 11, 181 N.C. 241.

(2) Defendant may recover upon claims arising out of transaction on which complaint is based, although amount claimed is less than jurisdictional amount of court.—Emery v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co.

the court does not have jurisdiction of a cross action for an amount below its minimum jurisdictional limits by one defendant against another defendant who asks no relief against the cross complainant.⁹⁵ In some jurisdictions certain courts which have acquired jurisdiction of an action have power to try and render judgment on any counterclaim, even though the judgment demanded against plaintiff is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court;⁹⁶ and the court having secured jurisdiction of the action by reason of the amount sued for in plaintiff's complaint has jurisdiction of other or further and additional claims set up in plaintiff's reply to offset a counterclaim set up in defendant's answer, even though such claims when added to the amount originally sued for total an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction.⁹⁷ In other jurisdictions in an action on a claim for an amount within its jurisdiction the court has jurisdiction of a set-off or counterclaim for an amount in excess of its jurisdiction, but does not have power to render a judgment in excess of its maximum jurisdictional limitations.⁹⁸ By the weight of authority, however, in an action on a claim for an amount within its jurisdiction, a court does not have jurisdiction of a cross demand which exceeds its maximum jurisdiction;⁹⁹ and such cross demand cannot be reduced to an amount within the jurisdiction of the court by crediting plaintiff's claim thereon;¹ but, as appears infra § 68, defendant may waive a portion of

Cross action between defendants

In a suit for mandatory injunction to abate a nuisance, the court, having acquired jurisdiction to abate the nuisance, has jurisdiction of a cross action by one defendant against another to recover expenses in an amount below the jurisdiction of the court, which he incurred in abating the nuisance.—Bartholomew v. Shipe, Tex.Com.App., 251 S.W. 1031, reversing Shipe v. Bartholomew, Civ. App., 239 S.W. 1020.

95. Tex.—City of Dallas v. Rutledge, Civ.App., 258 S.W. 534.

Jurisdiction determined independent of main action

Jurisdiction of a cause of action between codefendants, which is not dependent on or connected with the subject matter of the main action, is determined by the amount involved in the cause of action between said codefendants alone, without any aid from the jurisdiction conferred by the amount involved in the main action.—Morgan v. Remission of excess prerequisite to jurisdiction

(1) Defendant may not even use a demand exceeding the court's jurisdiction to extinguish plaintiff's claim without expressly remitting the amount in excess of jurisdiction.—Blankenship v. McDaniel, 261 S.W. 316, 164 Ark. 186.

(2) Where defendant's set-off was for amount beyond district court's jurisdiction and excess was not waived, set-off was properly stricken.—Platt v. Montclair Feed & Fuel Co., 157 A. 553, 9 N.J.Misc. 1319.

Dismissal

Court having no jurisdiction of cross-action because it was for sum in excess of jurisdiction could only dismiss it.—Mumme v. Spies, Tex. Civ.App., 15 S.W.2d 137.

Compensation

The courts have no jurisdiction of a demand in compensation in excess of their jurisdiction.—Koerner & Co. v. Francingues, 3 La.App. 220.

Reconvention

The courts have no jurisdiction of a claim in reconvention in excess of their maximum jurisdiction.—Arctic Pure Ice Co. v. Rathe, 3 La.App. 14—Kaufman v. Mahen, 2 La.App. 354.

Amount held not in excess of jurisdiction his demand so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the court; and in certain jurisdictions if the cross demand is for an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction the court may deal with it to the extent of plaintiff's claim, although it cannot give affirmative relief.² If the facts alleged in a defendant's cross action, the court having jurisdiction of plaintiff's suit, be such as to show no cause of action as to such a part of the whole sum sued for as to reduce it to an amount for which the court has jurisdiction, the cross action will not be dismissed, and it is immaterial in such case that the total sum may exceed the maximum jurisdictional amount.³

In some jurisdictions if a defendant has a liquidated counterclaim or defensive action against a plaintiff for a sum in excess of the jurisdiction of the court he may file it in the court along with an affidavit of good faith and the entire case will be transferred to another court whose jurisdiction extends to the amount involved.⁴

Plaintiff's claim as part of amount in defendant's cross action. In the determination of the amount involved in defendant's counterclaim or cross action, the amount of a debt sued on by plaintiff which defendant asks to be canceled,⁵ as where he pleads payment thereof,⁶ should be considered; but if he does not seek a cancellation of such debt the amount thereof cannot be added to the amount defendant seeks to recover in his cross action in the determination of the amount involved in such cross action for jurisdictional purposes.⁷

§ 67. Effect of Plea in Bar

In an action on notes a plea of payment by delivery of goods, whose value exceeded the maximum jurisdiction of the court, does not seek to have the court adjudicate a claim beyond its jurisdiction, where defendant does not seek any recovery from plaintiff.

Where, in an action on certain notes, defendant pleaded, in bar of plaintiff's right to recover, the delivery of certain goods under a contract with plaintiff, but did not seek to recover any amount on such contract, the fact that the value of the goods so delivered exceeded the amount as to which the court had jurisdiction did not defeat the jurisdiction of the court to determine the question whether such agreement had been made and the goods delivered thereunder.⁸

The term "due proof," in a statute providing that the case shall not be transferred unless the judge of the court to which it is intended to transfer the case shall, upon due proof, make an order that he finds there is reasonable cause to believe the set-off, counterclaim, or other defensive action, is founded on fact and has a reasonable chance of success on the trial, relates to proof of the existence of such facts and circumstances from which the judge can determine whether or not there is reasonable cause to believe that the counterclaim is founded on fact, and does not require defendant to state anything more than the facts on which he relies for a recovery.—Eder v. Hudson County Circuit Court, supra.

Early cases

(1) However, in an earlier case it was held, in an action on a note for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court in which defendant alleged payment and asked for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court as damages for wrongful attachment, that the amounts pleaded in payment should not have been added to the amount asked as damages in determining the amount involved in defendant's cross action.—Knoohuizen v. Nicholl, Tex.Civ.App. 257 S.W. 972.

(2) Also it was held in a case upholding the validity of the decision in Knoohuizen v. Nicholl, supra, that in an action to foreclose a mortgage on a truck in which defendant pleaded that the debt was paid and asked cancellation of the note and mortgage and for possession of property in the possession of the sheriff by virtue of a writ of sequestration issued in the case, but did not ask for judgment against plaintiff either for the amount of the note or for the sums which he had paid, that the amount of the note and the truck were not a part of the amount in controversy as respects the court's jurisdiction of defendant's cross action.—Commercial Credit Co. v. Moore, Tex.Civ.App., 283 S.W. 508.

of the amount involved below the jurisdiction of the court will not deprive it of jurisdiction, unless, in some jurisdictions, the reduction is due to a failure to allege a cause of action as to the items stricken; but the fact that before the action was commenced the claim was within the court's jurisdiction will not confer jurisdiction if, at the time the action was commenced, the amount had been reduced by credits or otherwise below the jurisdiction.

It is usually held that, where an action is originally brought for an amount which is within the jurisdiction of the court, jurisdiction is not defeated by a reduction of the amount involved to an extent which makes it less than the jurisdictional amount,⁹ in the absence of plea and proof that fraudulent allegations were made to confer jurisdiction, considered supra § 56. The fact that the amount originally due was within the jurisdiction of a superior court does not authorize such court to exercise jurisdiction, where before the action is commenced such amount has been reduced, by credits or otherwise, to a sum beneath the jurisdiction of the court;¹⁰ but in some jurisdictions this rule is subject to the exception that in an action on a book account or a note the debit side of the plaintiff's book,¹¹ or the face amount of the note,¹² is the amount in controversy for jurisdictional purposes, regardless of the balance due because of payments or credits on the account or note, unless, in the case of a book account, the account has been balanced and closed by agreement of the parties, in which case the balance is the amount in controversy.¹³

Effect of disclaimers in suit to quiet title. Where disclaimers filed by some of a number of defendants in a suit to quiet title are not directed to any particular subdivision of the tract of land described in the bill, but are of any right, title, or interest in any part of such tract, they do not reduce the value of the matter in dispute, which remains, as between the complainant and the remaining defendants, the value of the land involved.¹⁴

Payment from proceeds of prior foreclosure

Chattel mortgage given to secure payment of two notes, the larger of which was already secured by a deed of trust on real property, and providing for foreclosure upon default in payment of either was primary obligation as to each note, so that court had jurisdiction of action to foreclose, which was not lost because larger note was discharged from proceeds of foreclosure sale under deed of trust securing it and amount of smaller note was below jurisdictional amount.—Rosenkranz v. Bentley, 31 P.2d 782, 220 Cal. 529.

Trust & Savings Ass'n v. Ames*, supra.

(3) However, it has been held that if it appears from the petition that certain items are barred by the statute of limitations, and if an exception to such part of the petition is sustained on that ground and the amount in controversy thereby reduced below the minimum jurisdiction of the court, an exception to the jurisdiction of the court should be sustained and the suit dismissed.—*Low v. Application of deductions held erroneous

In suit on note on which partial payments had been made, court erroneously declined jurisdiction because deduction of aggregate of all payments from face of note left remainder of less than jurisdictional minimum of court, whereas application of partial payments first to interest due and then to principal would have resulted in sum within court's jurisdiction.—*J. than that for which the action is brought cannot operate to reduce the amount in controversy to the difference between the amount sued for and the amount tendered.¹⁵

b. As Conferring Jurisdiction on Court of Inferior or Limited Jurisdiction

In general, although there is some authority to the contrary, a party may confer jurisdiction on a court whose jurisdiction does not extend to the full amount of his claim by waiving or remitting the excess thereof.

Although there is some authority which holds that a party cannot remit a portion of his claim and thereby bring it within the jurisdiction of a court whose maximum jurisdiction is below the amount of the entire claim,¹⁶ by the weight of authority one who desires to sue in a court whose jurisdiction does not extend to the full amount of his claim may confer jurisdiction upon such court by waiving or remitting a portion of his claim, so that what remains is within the jurisdiction of the court.¹⁷ Thus a plaintiff may remit his claim for interest due and demandable,¹⁸ or recoverable as an element of damages,¹⁹ and by suing only for the amount of his claim without interest bring the case within the jurisdiction of a court whose jurisdiction would not extend to the amount of his claim with interest. However, in some jurisdictions this rule is qualified, the rule being that if a demand admits of segregation of the amount sought to be remitted, a plaintiff may validly abandon in its entirety a severable portion of his claim, and jurisdiction will be tested by the amount of the remaining claim;²⁰ but plaintiff cannot, by the remission of an arbitrary part of his claim,²¹ as by waiving a portion of any severable item sued on,²² or by arbitrarily reducing the value of property or services which are the subject matter of the suit,²³ bring his action within the jurisdiction of an inferior court. So, where an amount within the ju-

Purpose of credit

Whether a credit indorsed on a note was on account of a payment actually made, or voluntary and intended to bring the case within the summary jurisdiction of the circuit court, is a question for its determination.—Taylor v. Purvis, 19 S.C.L. 373.

Amount of rent due

Under constitutional provision limiting the jurisdiction of the city court in New Orleans in suits by landlords for possession of leased premises to cases where "the monthly or yearly rent, or the rent for the unexpired term of the lease, does not exceed" one hundred dollars, if the amount due exceeds that sum, but plaintiff does not sue for all that is due, the city court is without jurisdiction.—Runkel v. Payment a credit on reduced amount

In action for services and supplies furnished, plaintiff by suing in district court waived any excess of his claim over five hundred dollars and hence payment on claim was a credit on five hundred dollars.—Smith v. Spaeth, 128 A. 582, 3 N.J. Misc. 395.

Under statute

Under a statute which authorizes a party to waive all of his claim over three hundred dollars, in an action in a court whose maximum jurisdiction is five hundred dollars a plaintiff cannot give the court jurisdiction by waiving all of his claim over five hundred dollars, but, if he waives any of his claim, must waive all of it over three hundred dollars.—Mooney v. Part of a fixed sum

In foreclosure proceedings

In an action to foreclose a mortgage in which plaintiff failed to allege the value of the property, if the value of the property is in excess of the court's jurisdiction plaintiff cannot in good faith amend his petition by alleging a value of the property such as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court.—Glasscock v. Sinks, Tex.Civ.App., 185 S.W. 405.

jurisdiction of an inferior court in which the action is brought is claimed, jurisdiction is not affected by proof showing that plaintiff would be entitled to recover an amount in excess of the jurisdiction, although judgment cannot of course be entered for such an amount,²⁴ the rule applying with especial force where the claim sued on is unliquidated, whether the action is on contract or tort,²⁵ for the reason that in such a case there is no other test or measure which can be applied.²⁶

A court is not deprived of jurisdiction because the claim sued on was originally of an amount in excess of its jurisdiction, if it has been reduced by payments or credits to an amount within the jurisdiction.²⁷ Where the value of property involved in an action in an inferior court is not alleged, and the evidence shows a value in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, plaintiff cannot amend so as to bring the case within the jurisdiction.²⁸

Demand in pleadings in excess of jurisdiction. In some jurisdictions, where plaintiff in his complaint demands a sum beyond the jurisdiction of the court, no jurisdiction exists, and the case cannot be brought within the jurisdiction by a waiver on the part of plaintiff of a part of his demand,²⁹ or by a remission of interest claimed, where the principal debt is within the jurisdictional limit.³⁰ In other jurisdictions, where plaintiff in his original complaint demands a sum in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, a remission of a part of the claim so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the court may be made during the pendency of the action;³¹ and, as appears infra § 69, to accomplish this result a party may amend his pleadings by reducing the amount claimed. In New York, as appears infra § 69, where at the time of the commencement of the suit by the service of summons it appears that the amount demanded is in excess of the jurisdictional limitation of the court, as where the amount appears in a complaint served with the summons, or in the summons by a statement therein of the amount sued for or a reference therein to the demand to be made in the complaint, the court has no jurisdiction; and the case cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by a waiver by plaintiff of a part of his demand, as by a remission of interest claimed, where the principal debt is within the jurisdictional limit;³² and if plaintiff is successful, he is not entitled to remit the excess over the jurisdictional amount and have judgment for what remains.³³

Admission of part of indebtedness. The fact that on the trial the defendant admits a portion of the debt sued for, leaving in controversy a balance less than the jurisdictional minimum of the court, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.³⁴

Set-off or counterclaim. A set-off or counterclaim may be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by a waiver or remission of the excess over the jurisdictional limit,³⁵ subject in those jurisdictions where the rule applies, see supra this section note 20, to the proviso that the remission must be of a severable portion of the claim.³⁶ In New Jersey a distinction is drawn between set-off and recoupment. A cross action placing the value of property for whose destruction recovery is sought at an amount within the jurisdiction of the court is not a fraud on the court, where it was fixed in good faith by the defendant's counsel, although the real value of the property was in excess of the court's jurisdiction.—San Jacinto Rice Co. v. statute, confer jurisdiction by waiving the excess;³⁷ but, there being no statutory provision for such a waiver in case of a demand in recoupment or counterclaim, it is held that the assertion of such a demand exceeding the jurisdiction of the court deprives it of jurisdiction notwithstanding a waiver of the excess.³⁸ However, as appears infra § 69 note 15, the recoupment or counterclaim may be amended so as to give the court jurisdiction.

Verdict or judgment in excess of jurisdiction. In some jurisdictions, in case a verdict is rendered for an amount beyond the jurisdiction of the court, the excess may be remitted and judgment entered for the jurisdictional amount,³⁹ or the court may, of its own motion, remit the excess or presume the excess to be remitted.⁴⁰ There is, however, authority for the view that, where the amount actually recovered is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, jurisdiction is lost;⁴¹ and it has been held that a statute permitting a party to remit the excess, if "the amount found due exceeds the sum for which the court is authorized to enter judgment," does not apply to a case where the amount demanded in the summons and complaint was beyond the jurisdiction of the court in the first instance.⁴² Plaintiff cannot, by remitting a portion of the judgment rendered, confer jurisdiction of an action in which the pleadings claim an amount in excess of the jurisdictional limit.⁴³

Judgment in excess of amount claimed. Under a statute giving a court jurisdiction where the sum claimed did not exceed a certain amount, it has been held that, where plaintiff claimed only that amount, jurisdiction is not affected by the judgment's being for more, but the excess may be waived.⁴⁴

§ 69. Pleading and Proof

In general the amount in controversy is determined from the allegations of the pleadings, and they must allege an amount within the jurisdiction of the court.

Ordinarily the pleadings determine the amount in controversy, and therefore, the jurisdiction of the particular action asserted,⁴⁵ unless, as appears supra § 56, it is shown that such amount was alleged fraudulently for the purpose of giving the court jurisdiction; and this is ordinarily determined by the amount alleged in the complaint, declaration, or petition,⁴⁶ regardless of the truth of the allega-

Remittitur after judgment

Where remittitur was not entered prior to judgment for three hundred twenty-five dollars in city court of Shreveport, agreement among counsel afterward that court should enter another judgment for amount within court's jurisdiction did not cure lack of jurisdiction nor validate judgment.—Peyton v. When determined on complaint only

Amount in controversy must be determined on plaintiff's petition alone, in absence of plea in abatement, ruling on general demurrer, plea that plaintiff's allegations were fraudulently made to confer jurisdiction, or objection to evidence of value.—Pennant Oil & Gas Co. v. Lightfoot, Tex. Civ.App., 286 S.W. 249, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 292 S.W. 517.

Variance between complaint and bill of particulars

When the complaint is in writing, it is the complaint, and not the bill of particulars, which determines the jurisdiction; and so the demand of the complaint will not be enlarged by a bill of particulars containing a statement of damages amounting to a sum in excess of the sum demanded in the complaint.—French v.

tions;⁴⁷ and the question of jurisdiction is concluded by its averments in so far as they state facts in relation to the thing in controversy, unless it otherwise appears that a plaintiff in framing his petition has improperly sought to give jurisdiction where it does not properly belong.⁴⁸

Although, under some statutes, an allegation of the amount in dispute is not jurisdictional,⁴⁹ and plaintiff's pleadings are not subject to demurrer because they do not show that the amount in dispute is within the jurisdiction of the court,⁵⁰ in general, unless the court has jurisdiction because of the nature of the subject matter,⁵¹ the complaint, declaration, or petition must affirmatively⁵² show that the amount involved is within the jurisdiction of the court in which the action is brought,⁵³ which petition or complaint must be in writing and filed;⁵⁴ and a failure to allege this jurisdictional fact cannot be cured by proof,⁵⁵ nor supplied from the trial court's finding in its judgment.⁵⁶ There is, however, authority for the view that the amount need not be set forth in the complaint, declaration, or petition,⁵⁷ but may be set forth in a summons or in the

Complaint construed

A complaint in the county court, demanding judgment for a certain amount against "each and both of the defendants," was not defective as demanding three times the amount designated, which would be beyond the jurisdiction of the county court, since from a fair construction of the allegation the amount mentioned was the one requested.—Curran v. Arp, 125 N.Y.S. 758, 141 App.Div. 38.

Formal averment unnecessary

The amount in controversy, where jurisdiction depends on it, need not be stated by formal averment, provided jurisdiction in that regard is inferable from other facts pleaded.—Abbott v. Gregory, 39 Mich. 68—Palmer v. Rich, 12 Mich. 414.

Book account

Under a statute which provides that in an action on a book account the matter in demand shall be the debtor side of plaintiff's book, and which prescribes the writ, but does not require an allegation of the jurisdictional fact, the writ need not affirmatively show the jurisdiction of the court.—A. H. Berry Shoe Co. v. Deschenes, 35 A. 335, 68 Vt. 387.

50. Mich.—Brassington v. Waldron, 107 N.W. 100, 143 Mich. 364.

Defendant's remedy

(1) If the amount in dispute is not within the court's jurisdiction, defendant's remedy is not to demur, but to raise the jurisdictional question by plea or answer.—Brassington v. Waldron, supra.

(2) However, he may insist on the objection at the hearing where it appears, either by pleadings or proof, that the value in controversy is not within the jurisdictional amount.—Brandt v. Luce, 142 N.W. 1117, 177 Mich. 184—Brassington v. Waldron, supra.

Pleadings held sufficient

(1) An allegation in a taxpayer's suit that complainant's interest in the matters involved exceeded the jurisdictional amount was sufficient to show jurisdictional interest to withstand a demurrer.—Brandt v. Luce, 142 N.W. 1117, 177 Mich. 184.

(2) A bill alleging that the amount owing, by complainant on a judgment was one hundred dollars over and above any and all claims or liens which any person claimed to have against such judgment "as far as complainant was advised" is a sufficient statement of the amount involved.—Robinson v. Kunkleman, 75 N.W. 451, 117 Mich. 193.

App., 11 S.W.2d 224—Williams v. Tyler, Civ.App., 258 S.W. 886—Tant v. Baldwin Piano Co., Civ.App., 217 S.W. 239.

Form of averment

The jurisdictional averments need not be in any prescribed form, and averments which are equivalent to an allegation that the amount in controversy, or the value of the property involved, does not exceed the jurisdictional amount, may be used.—Greene v. Gibson, 127 P. 239, 53 Colo. 346.

County court

(1) In the county court plaintiff's petition must affirmatively show jurisdiction.—Parsons v. John Deere Plow Co., Tex.Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 970—Thompson v. Dalley, Tex.Civ. App., 95 S.W.2d 1007.

(2) A county court had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining the opening of a county road through petitioner's land, where the petition contained no allegation as to the value of the subject of the controversy.—Dewitt County v. Wischkemper, 67 S.W. 882, 95 Tex. 435.

53. Tex.—Brown v. Peters, 94 S.W. 2d 129, 127 Tex. 300, affirming Peters v. Brown, Civ.App., 58 S.W. 2d 1063—Press v. Davis, Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 982, error granted—Whittle Music Co. v. Lammons, Civ.App., 93 S.W.2d 233. 15 C.J. p 759 note 80.

Nominal damages

Allegations of actual damages are necessary to confer jurisdiction to award nominal damages only on a court whose minimum jurisdiction is above such amount.—Press v. Davis, Tex.Civ.App., 118 S.W.2d 982, error granted.

writ,⁵⁸ or in interrogatories filed in a garnishment proceeding;⁵⁹ that it is sufficient if the amount appears from the pleadings as a whole;⁶⁰ and that, if the entire record shows that the jurisdictional amount is involved, this is sufficient.⁶¹ In New York, where at the time of the commencement of the suit by the service of summons it appears that the amount demanded is in excess of the jurisdictional limitation of the court, as where the amount appears in a complaint served with the summons, or in the summons by a statement therein of the amount sued for or a reference therein to the demand to be made in the complaint, the court acquires no jurisdiction of the case;⁶² but, where the summons is served first and indicates no stated amount of claim, or states an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the court acquires jurisdiction, and it is not deprived thereof because plain-

In some jurisdictions the jurisdiction of specified courts, so far as it depends on the amount or value of the thing in question, is to be decided solely by the ad damnum set forth in the writ.⁶⁴ In other jurisdictions the amount in controversy is determined from the petition, declaration, or complaint taken as a whole,⁶⁵ and constitutes the amount demanded up to which proof can be made for the purposes of recovery.⁶⁶ Ordinarily the amount claimed in the prayer or ad damnum clause of the petition, declaration, or complaint determines the amount in controversy,⁶⁷ but such amount is not necessarily conclusive;⁶⁸ and, where necessary to determine the court having jurisdiction, the court may scrutinize the allegations of the complaint,⁶⁹ some ju-

Interpretation

(1) The court must interpret the fact of the summons by what appears on the indorsement.—Nowinski v. La Monte, supra.

(2) Where, in a suit by several plaintiffs, they fail separately to state the amount sued for, the court has interpreted the summons as if it demanded judgment in separate amounts for the different plaintiffs for the amount for which judgment was demanded on the face of the summons.—Nowinski v. La Monte, supra.

Municipal court

(1) Test of jurisdiction of municipal court of New York City is amount fixed in summons.—Gunner v. E. R. Squibb & Sons, 269 N.Y.S. 661, 150 Misc. 83.

(2) This is true, even though the damages as itemized in an amended complaint aggregate an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of the municipal court.—Gunner v. E. R. Squibb & Sons, supra.

Statement of amount held sufficient

Petition which alleged property depreciated in value from one thousand two hundred dollars to three hundred dollars as result of removal of trees therefrom claimed nine hundred dollars damages, and district court had jurisdiction.—Gulf States Utilities Co. v. Reference to complaint

In an action for money only, where summons, served with or without complaint, states amount for which judgment will be taken on default, by words "for relief demanded in complaint," and the complaint, when served, demands judgment for an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction, the summons demands judgment for the same amount, and service does not confer jurisdiction on county court.—Mansson v. Ad damnum clause insufficient

The jurisdictional statement in the complaint, and not the ad damnum clause, must be looked to to ascertain the court's jurisdiction.—Bloomer v. Jones, 125 P. 541, 22 Colo.App. 404.

Jurisdictional averment controls ad damnum clause

Where in replevin plaintiff alleged that the value of the property sued for was one thousand dollars and demanded a judgment for two thousand five hundred dollars, but also alleged that the amount in controversy for which relief was sought did not exceed two thousand dollars, such allegation controlled the ad damnum clause of the complaint, and, therefore, alleged a cause of action within the court's jurisdiction, so that defendant was not prejudiced by a subsequent amendment on appeal, still further reducing the ad damnum clause to seven hundred dollars.—Dunkle v. French, 116 P. 1039, 51 Colo. 170.

Erroneous classification

(1) Where the amount claimed is such as to give the court jurisdiction of a contract, but not of a tort action, it will have jurisdiction, if the allegations of fact in the complaint are sufficient to support an action for implied breach of contract, even though the complaint designates the action as one in tort.—Thomason v. Chicago Motor Coach Co., 1 N.E.2d 729, 284 Ill.App. 593.

(2) As respects jurisdiction of county court, damages for pain and suffering were recoverable as natural consequences of plaintiff's injuries, notwithstanding such damages were designated in plaintiff's petition as exemplary damages.—Wilson v. Yates, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 639.

Variation in statement

(1) Allegations as to plaintiff's inability to ascertain amount of business transacted by defendants and praying accounting are not sufficient to confer jurisdiction on superior court, amount allegedly due being elsewhere stated as definite sum.—Stevens v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 293 P. 620, 109 Cal.App. 522.

(2) Where the petition on its face showed that plaintiff, a broker, was not entitled to recover more than five hundred dollars for the owner's breach of a contract of sale, an allegation that a greater sum was a reasonable compensation cannot confer jurisdiction on the district court to hear the case.—Martin v. Jeffries, Tex.Civ.App., 153 S.W. 658.

Jurisdiction shown

Superior court was held not without jurisdiction of unlawful detainer proceeding on ground that record affirmatively showed lack of evidence as to monthly rental value of rental estate, where complaint alleged property to be worth one hundred twenty-three thousand dollars and rental value thereof one thousand five hundred dollars per month and asked for three thousand dollars damages.—San Jose Pacific Building & Loan Ass'n v. Corum, 37 P.2d 866, 2 Cal.App.2d 276.

Specific statement of sums sued for unnecessary

Complaint is not demurrable on jurisdictional grounds for failure to make specific statement of sums sued for, where, by any computation as to elements comprising total, amount prayed exceeded superior court's jurisdictional minimum.—McCune v. Harris, 50 P.2d 837, 9 Cal.App.2d 719.

Where items specified

The amount in controversy is not the amount prayed for, nor the amount stated generally in the petition, where the items going to make up the total value or damages are specifically stated and the aggregate sum thereof differs from the amount prayed for or stated generally. The total of the items specifically set out comprises the amount in controversy in case of such conflict.—Wilson v. Yates, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 639—Abilene & S. Ry. Co. v. Bagwell, Tex.Civ.App., 70 S.W.2d 480, error dismissed—Davis v. Rush, Tex.Civ.App., 288 S.W. 504—Simms Oil Co. v. Hall, Tex.Civ.App., 281 S.W. 286—Taylor v. Buzan, Tex.Civ.App., 241 S.W. 1084—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Hamrick, Tex.Civ.App., 231 S.W. 166.

Mistake as to amount or value of item

(1) Miscalculation by pleader or by court cannot alter plain allegations of facts relied on for recovery, in determining whether suit is for amount larger than amount over which court has jurisdiction.—Wilson v. Yates, Tex.Civ.App., 120 S.W.2d 639.

(2) A petition which states generally that the amount involved is nine hundred fifty dollars and twenty-five cents, and which sets forth a detailed list of the items of property destroyed, aggregating nine hundred fifty dollars and twenty-five cents, while one item shows on its face a mistake either in the number of tons or the price per ton or the total value, will be construed as stating a cause of action within the court's jurisdiction on the theory that the mistake is in the number of tons.—Fort Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Dy-sart, Tex.Civ.App., 136 S.W. 1117.

(3) In personal injury action in county court where plaintiff alleged that at time of accident she was earning ten dollars per week and would be out of employment for twelve months, court could not compute loss of earnings for twelve-month period as four hundred eighty dollars, notwithstanding allegation in plaintiff's petition that damages for loss of earnings amounted to four hundred eighty dollars.—Wilson v. Yates, supra.

is not definitely fixed by law or otherwise alleged, for jurisdictional purposes, the sum prayed for constitutes the amount in controversy.⁷² The amount demanded in the prayer for judgment or ad damnum clause does not determine the jurisdiction of the court when the real demand or value of the property involved otherwise clearly appears and the ad damnum is in excess of the real demand;⁷³ if it appears from the pleadings that plaintiff cannot recover the amount claimed, the amount claimed is the highest sum which plaintiff on the face of the pleadings appears to be entitled to recover.⁷⁴ If the cause of action stated is for an amount less than the jurisdictional limits of the court, it will not have jurisdiction, even though judgment is demanded for an amount within its jurisdiction;⁷⁵ but, where the cause of action alleged in the body of the complaint is for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the court has jurisdiction, even though the prayer for judgment is for an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction.⁷⁶ On the other hand, if the cause of action set forth in the body of the petition, declaration, or complaint is for an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction and the prayer for judgment is for a less amount, which is within the jurisdiction of the court, in some jurisdictions the prayer operates as a waiver of the excess and the court has jurisdiction;⁷⁷ but in other jurisdictions, if the cause of action shown by the complaint is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, jurisdiction cannot be entertained by reason of the fact that the judgment demanded is for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court.⁷⁸

Value of property. In general the value alleged in the petition or complaint determines the value of the property involved for jurisdictional purposes,⁷⁹ and not the evidence of such value;⁸⁰ and, subject to the rule that the real amount actually in controversy controls the jurisdiction, considered supra § 53, if the allegation of amount is honestly made, it determines the jurisdiction of the court, even though the jury value the property at an amount not within the jurisdiction of the court.⁸¹ However, it has been held that, under the practice in some jurisdictions, where an allegation in the complaint as to the value of the property involved, putting it within the jurisdiction of the court, is denied in the answer, there must, in order to support a judgment in favor of plaintiff, be a special finding that the value of the property is such as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court.⁸²

If plaintiff has filed a bill of particulars as part of the record, and it thereby appears that recovery cannot be had for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, then a want of jurisdiction appears of record.—Grether v. Klock, 39 Conn. 133.

Dismissal

Action will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction where the petition, although seeking to recover an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, on its face discloses that a recovery cannot be had for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court.—Youngblood v. Independent Order of Puritans, Tex.Civ.App., 197 S.W. 1116.

Sufficiency of pleadings

(1) A court whose jurisdiction is limited in actions to recover possession of chattels to chattels not exceeding one thousand dollars in value did not have jurisdiction of an action in which the complaint alleged the chattels to be worth "upwards of $1,000."—Kessler v. Zucker, 202 N. Y.S. 770.

(2) A petition for an injunction and a receiver which states that the suit is for the recovery of sixteen thousand six hundred dollars worth of property from the possession of certain named parties, and seeks to place it in the hands of others for their management and control, or to distribute it among the owners thereof, and alleges that the daily increase in the value of the property is one hundred twenty-five dollars, is sufficient to show that the amount in controversy is within the jurisdiction of the district court.—Woodward v. Smith, Tex.Civ.App., 253 S. W. 847.

(3) Petition in trover alleging value of property sued for as ninety dollars with yearly value of ten dollars was held not demurrable as showing that amount involved exceeded hundred dollar jurisdiction of monthly term of Dublin city court, where no claim for hire was alleged.—Dorsey v. Cotton States Fertilizer Co., 167 S.E. 924, 46 Ga.App. 485.

(4) Early cases on this point see 15 C.J. p 764 note 30 [b].

Form of plea

Where a petition alleges the taking of plaintiff's timber worth an amount within the county court's jurisdiction and a mingling of it with defendant's timber and seeks a recovery of the title and possession of the whole, but does not allege the value of defendant's timber with which it was mingled, an exception to the petition on the ground that it affirmatively shows that the amount in controversy exceeds the jurisdiction of the court should not be sustained, but one on the ground that the value of all the timber was not shown should be sustained.—Houston Oil Co. of Texas v. Davis, Tex.Civ. App., 154 S.W. 337.

Appointment of receiver

(1) A petition for the dissolution of a firm and the appointment of a receiver, which contains no allegation of the value of the business or of plaintiff's interest therein, falls to show value sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the district court.—Childs v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W. 1154.

(2) District court was held without jurisdiction to appoint receiver of corporation where petition did not allege amount of incorporation, number of shares of capital stock, or value thereof, value of property and assets of such corporation, or value of petitioner's interest or probable interest therein by which amount in controversy could be ascertained.—Lubbock Oil Refining Co. v. Bourn, Tex.Civ.App., 96 S.W.2d 569.

Corporate stock

(1) A petition for mandamus to compel a corporation to issue stock must contain an allegation of the value of the stock, and an allegation of the number of shares and their face value is not sufficient to show jurisdiction of a district court to determine the issue.—Motex Oil Corporation v. Taylor, Tex.Civ.App., 233 S.W. 520.

(2) A petition, alleging that plaintiff tendered into court six hundred sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents as par value of corporation stock sought to be recovered, alleged that the minimum amount in controversy was six hundred sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents.—Berkman v. Levy, Tex.Civ.App., 129 S.W.2d 397, error dismissed, judgment correct.

(3) Earlier cases on this point see 15 C.J. p 763 note 30 [c].

Injunction

(1) In an action to enjoin trespasses on real estate pending a suit to try title thereto, the county judge had no jurisdiction to grant a temporary injunction where the petition did not allege the value of the subject matter of the suit.—Johnson v. Clemmons, Tex.Civ.App., 158 S.W. 797.

(2) County court had jurisdiction of amount of claim for recovery of one hundred forty-seven dollars and ninety cents, but had no jurisdiction to issue temporary injunction to restrain shipment of cotton on which plaintiff claimed lien, where plaintiff failed to allege value of cotton.—Booher v. Brown, Tex.Civ.App., 87 S.W.2d 330.

(3) An action to recover two hundred seventy-six dollars and ninety cents actual damages for seller's breach of covenant not to carry on competitive business of printing or publishing a newspaper for period of five years and for injunctive relief was not within jurisdiction of county court but within jurisdiction of district court, where petition did not state value of covenant which it was sought to protect by injunctive relief.—Price v. Miller, Tex.Civ.App., 112 S.W.2d 761, error dismissed.

(4) County court was without jurisdiction of application to enjoin execution against trucks without alleging their value.—Salamy v. Bruce, Tex.Civ.App., 21 S.W.2d 380.

Mortgaged property claimed by third person

Where petition seeking foreclosure of chattel mortgage alleged that a third person set up some claim to the property, the value of the property, and not the debt due from mortgagor to mortgagee, was the amount in controversy, and, if such value was not alleged, the petition did not affirmatively show jurisdiction as to the third person.—People's Ice Co. v. Phariss, Tex.Civ.App., 203 S.W. 66.

To compel delivery of property

A petition for mandamus to compel an officer to accept a replevy bond and deliver property to the principal therein which did not show that the property was within the jurisdictional value of the court was insufficient.—Keasler Lumber Co. v. Clark, Tex.Civ.App., 151 S.W. 845.

To enforce contract

To confer jurisdiction on the county court to enforce a contract whereby defendant, in consideration of a grant of the oil in certain land, agreed to give plaintiff a portion of the oil to be produced, the value of such oil must be alleged to be within the jurisdiction of the court.—Staley & Barnsdall v. Derden, 121 S.W. 1136, 57 Tex.Civ.App. 142.

Demurrer

Petition in chattel mortgage foreclosure suit, not alleging value of automobile, was held demurrable.—Peters v. Brown, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 1063, affirmed Brown v. Peters, 94 S.W.2d 129, 127 Tex. 300—D. V. Brooks Co. v. Vera, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 1061, affirmed Vera v. D. V. Brooks Co., 94 S.W.2d 132, 127 Tex. 306.

Limitation to amount of claim

The county court is without jurisdiction in a suit on a money demand for an amount within the jurisdiction of the court and for foreclosure of a lien on cotton, where the petition failed to allege the value of the cotton, although the prayer for execution was limited to so much thereof as was necessary to satisfy the lien.—Booher v. Brown, Tex.Civ. App., 87 S.W.2d 330.

Sufficiency of allegations

(1) Allegation that consideration for note wholly failed was sufficient to show that property on which seller sought foreclosure did not exceed court's jurisdiction.—Jones v. National Cash Register Co., Tex.Civ. App., 52 S.W.2d 1083, error dismissed.

(2) A statement of the purchase price of the property is not a sufficient allegation of its value.—Ollouqui v. Duran, 92 S.W.2d 436, 127 Tex. 156, setting aside, Civ.App., 60 S.W.2d 808.

(3) A contra case in a lower court held that a statement of the purchase price in the seller's petition was sufficient to show value of property.—Jones v. National Cash Register Co., supra.

(4) Where the price agreed on by the parties for the property, if treated as the value, was an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, and this price was alleged, and the evidence received without objection fixed the value of the chattels at an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the court had jurisdiction to render judgment for the debt and for foreclosure of the mortgage, although the petition failed to allege the value of the property.—Edwards v. Mayes, Tex.Civ.App., 136 S.W. 510.

(5) An allegation that both parties agreed to a sale of the car for four hundred fifty dollars and that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of three hundred dollars is insufficient to show the value of the automobile.—Hodgkinson v. Hartwell, Tex.Civ. App., 226 S.W. 457.

Allegation in mortgage set out

Petition alleging nonpayment of note and execution of chattel mortgage, set out, warranting that property was of reasonable value of one thousand dollars, sufficiently alleged value of property.—Fuqua v. Mapes, Tex.Com.App., 57 S.W.2d 97, affirming, Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 847.

Affidavit of sequestration insufficient

(1) Allegations of value of mortgaged chattels set forth in affidavit of sequestration could not be imported into petition for foreclosure since allegation of value must be in the petition itself.—Brown v. Peters, 94 S.W.2d 129, 127 Tex. 300, affirming Peters v. Brown, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 1063, in effect overruling Dubois v. Walters, Tex.Civ.App., 289 S.W. 751, which the opinion stated conflicted with the case affirmed—Moore v. First State Bank of Livingston, Tex.Civ.App., 127 S.W.2d 536—D. V. Brooks Co. v. Vera, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 1061, affirmed Vera v. D. V. Brooks Co., 94 S.W.2d 132, 127 Tex. 306—Kiechler v. Klein, Tex.Civ. App., 246 S.W. 1079.

(2) Affidavit filed during progress of suit for purpose of procuring issuance of writ of sequestration to impound property involved in suit is not a "pleading" or part of "pleadings" as respects jurisdiction of county court of chattel mortgage foreclosure suit, wherein petition did not allege value of mortgaged property.—Brown v. Peters, 94 S.W.2d 129, 127 Tex. 300, affirming Peters v. Brown, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 1063.

An amended petition in the county court, which alleges that since the time of the filing of the suit;⁸⁷ and the fact that the sum sued for is within the jurisdiction of the court will not be sufficient to confer jurisdiction without an allegation showing that the value of the property covered by the lien is not in excess of the jurisdictional amount of the court.⁸⁸ If, however, suit to enforce the lien is brought in a court which, as to the amount in controversy, has no maximum limit on its jurisdiction, the value of the property covered by the lien need not be alleged if the amount sued for is within the jurisdiction of the court.⁸⁹ It has been held that plaintiff's failure to allege the value of the property involved may be cured by an allegation of value in defendant's pleadings,⁹⁰ but that proof of value is not sufficient;⁹¹ and that the failure to allege the value of the property does not defeat the jurisdiction of the court to render a personal judgment where it does not foreclose the lien and exercises no jurisdiction over the mortgaged property.⁹²

In some jurisdictions in an action in claim and delivery the complaint need not allege the value of the property sought to be recovered, but it is sufficient if the complaint alleges damages in a sum within the jurisdiction of the court.⁹³ In general the amount alleged in the petition, declaration, or complaint as to the value of the property replevined

governs for jurisdictional purposes.⁹⁴ However, in some jurisdictions in a replevin proceeding the affidavit fixes the value of the property sought to be recovered for jurisdictional purposes.⁹⁵ In still other jurisdictions, in a replevin suit in which the value of the property is not stated, if the jury bring in a verdict fixing the value of the property at a sum not within the jurisdiction of the court, such valuation ousts the jurisdiction of the court, in the absence of a showing that plaintiff had reason to believe, or did actually believe, the valuation to be within the court's jurisdiction.⁹⁶

Failure to state cause of action. If the petition on its face shows that plaintiff is not entitled to recover under the law an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the court has no jurisdiction of the cause.⁹⁷ So where the petition fails to state a cause of action as to a claim made, the amount thereof cannot be considered in determining the amount in controversy;⁹⁸ and, even though the amount claimed in the petition is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the case, if the facts alleged are such as to show no cause of action as to such part of the whole sum sued for as to reduce it below the amount for which the court has jurisdiction, the suit should be dismissed;⁹⁹ but a mere insufficiency of the petition to state a cause of ac-institution of the action defendant has paid off a seventy-five dollar note secured by a chattel mortgage, renders the allegations in the original petition as to the execution of such note and mortgage ineffective to show the existence of a lien sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court.—Thompson v. Perryman, Tex.Civ.App., 141 S.W. 184.

87. Tex.—Peters v. Hubb Diggs Co., Civ.App., 35 S.W.2d 449, error dismissed.

Sufficiency of allegation

Allegation that mortgage was executed on binder of the value of one hundred dollars and two tractors of the value of one hundred fifty dollars each was held intended to allege the value at the time of the filing of the suit and not at the time of the execution of the mortgage.—Peters v. Hubb Diggs Co., supra.

tion will not show a want of jurisdiction, it being necessary for the pleadings to show that no cause of action for such items can be stated consistent with the facts alleged.¹

Allegations by defendant. An allegation in the answer that the amount in controversy is less than the amount necessary to confer jurisdiction cannot avail to defeat jurisdiction where the amount claimed in the complaint is within the jurisdiction of the court,² and where the complaint or petition fails to allege the amount in controversy in an application for a receivership, allegations of the value of the subject matter of the litigation, made in a motion to discharge the receiver, will not validate the insufficiency of the petition.³ A plea of payment of one of several notes sued on does not of itself lessen the amount in controversy as fixed by the petition or complaint,⁴ nor does a denial of indebtedness reduce the amount in controversy.⁵

Construction of pleadings. Subject to the rule that the pleadings must positively show jurisdiction and that it is not sufficient for the petition merely to show that the court may have jurisdiction,⁶ the pleadings will be construed liberally in favor of the court's jurisdiction.⁷ A court of limited jurisdiction is without jurisdiction where the amount de-

Co., 77 S.W. 37, 33 Tex.Civ.App. 391.

On sustaining demurrer

If the sustaining of demurrer to petition reduces sum sought to be recovered to an amount below jurisdiction of court, the suit should be dismissed.—Wood County v. Cate, 12 S.W. 536, 75 Tex. 219—Tindle v. Elms, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 437—15 C.J. p 776 note 24 [a].

Sustaining exceptions to part of claims

Where exceptions to items alleged in the petition are sustained and the amount in controversy thereafter remaining is less than the minimum amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the petition should be dismissed.—Haddock v. Taylor, 11 S.W. 1093, 74 Tex. 216—Grief v. Texas Cent. R. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 163 S.W. 345—Browning v. El Paso Lumber Co., Tex.Civ.App., 140 S.W. 386—Barrett v. Wentz, Tex.Civ.App., 138 S.W. 428—Kopperl v. Western Union Telegraph Co., Tex.Civ.App., 85 S.W. 1018.

Items held not unrecoverable

County court had jurisdiction of action for breach of warranty that bull was breeder, where it was alleged that bull bought for one hundred ninety-five dollars was valueless and that plaintiffs lost calf crop of value of three hundred twenty-five dollars, since amount in controversy was more than two hundred dollars.—Farmer v. Kay Bros., Tex.Civ.App., 73 S.W.2d 546, error dismissed.

Insufficiency of count

Where a complaint contains a count not stating a cause of action and the remaining counts demand sums aggregating less than the minimum to which the jurisdiction of the court extends, the action cannot be entertained.—Reeg v. McArthur, 119 P. 105, 17 Cal.App. 203.

Interest

(1) Where petition is doubtful as to when interest sought is to begin, it will be construed to begin when the judgment was rendered, where, if it began before such time, the court would not have had jurisdiction on account of amount involved.—Magnolia Cotton Oil Co. v. Martin, Tex.Civ.App., 201 S.W. 190.

(2) In action in the county court on a policy of fire insurance, where petition asked for judgment for one thousand dollars, amount of policy, and further general and special relief, it will not be construed as asking for interest or any amount in excess of one thousand dollars.—Merchants' Reciprocal Underwriters of Dallas v. First Nat. Bank, Tex. Civ.App., 192 S.W. 1098.

(3) In action in county court for breach of implied warranty of seeds, a complaint alleging that if the seed had been as represented plaintiff would have produced five tons of broomcorn on his land, worth two hundred dollars a ton over and above all expenses of raising and harvesting, was not bad as in excess of jurisdiction of the county court, plaintiff not asking for judgment in excess of one thousand dollars and not asking for interest in any form.—Pittman & Harrison Co. v. Boatenhamer, Tex.Civ.App., 210 S.W. 972, dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

manded is indefinite and such that it is not necessarily within the court's jurisdiction.⁸ In an action on a note in a court not having jurisdiction of suits to foreclose liens on land, the mere statement in the pleadings of the existence of a lien on land securing the note, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, the petition not seeking a foreclosure of the lien.⁹

Amendment of pleadings. In some jurisdictions, pleadings which do not show an amount in controversy within the jurisdiction of the court may not be amended so as to demand a jurisdictional amount,¹⁰ as by an amendment reducing the amount claimed.¹¹ In other jurisdictions, if the pleadings show an amount in controversy not within the jurisdiction of the court, they cannot be amended so as to confer jurisdiction.¹² In still other jurisdictions if the action was brought in good faith to recover an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, the court has jurisdiction to allow an amendment so as to show what was the sum originally claimed;¹³ but an amendment is not proper for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction on the court.¹⁴ By the weight of authority, however, a petition which fails to show that the amount involved is within the jurisdiction of the court may be amended to show a jurisdictional amount in controversy¹⁵ by increasing¹⁶ or reducing¹⁷ the amount claimed

Variation between counts

Where, in one count of petition, plaintiff sued for one hundred fifty dollars as the value of a house, and in another count alleged house to be worth two hundred fifty dollars, and sued for that amount in conversion, the petition, on its face, did not show that less than two hundred dollars was involved, and was sufficient to give jurisdiction to county court.—Robbins v. Winters, Tex.Civ. App., 203 S.W. 149.

8. N.Y.—Gerken v. Gerken, 199 N.Y. S. 169.

Failure to demand definite amount

In an action for breach of an employment contract in which plaintiff failed to demand a definite amount, the complaint was construed as seeking to recover damages only up to the jurisdictional amount for which the municipal court could render judgments.—Ker v. Stern, 175 N.Y.S. 475, 107 Misc. 4.

11. Ala.—Davis v. Jerrell, 149 So. 720, 25 Ala.App. 524.

Amendment to amendment

After an amendment to the complaint which ousts the jurisdiction of the court by increasing the amount claimed to an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction, plaintiff cannot subsequently amend his complaint again by reducing the amount claimed to an amount within the jurisdictional limits of the court.—Egan v. Rounds, 216 N.W. 878, 52 S.D. 139.

Tort action

Where the declaration in an action of trespass vi et armis contains no statement of the damages claimed, except a statement in the ad damnum of an amount less than the jurisdictional amount of the court, although such statement be a clerical error, the court could not confer jurisdiction on itself by amendment of the declaration.—Sanders v. Contra

In an early case in a lower court, it was held that the petition, in an action for an amount less than that of which the court has jurisdiction, cannot be amended by an allegation adding to such an amount so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of the court.—Gleaton v. Cothran, 84 S.E. 486, 16 Ga.App. 35.

Items stricken and added

Where items are stricken out of a complaint and others added by amendment the jurisdiction will be determined by the amount of those not stricken out and of those so added.—Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Kolbe, 65 S.W. 34, 95 Tex. 76.

Time allowed

Amendment may be made even or involved, or by permitting the withdrawal of one or more counts sued on.¹⁸ However, in jurisdictions which authorize the remission, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, of only the whole of a severable portion of a claim, an amendment reducing the value of services sued for, merely for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, is not allowed;¹⁹ but where the amount claimed is unliquidated, and the pleader by inadvertence or mistake fixes his damages at a sum in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, he may by amendment filed in good faith retain the jurisdiction by reducing his demand to a jurisdictional amount,²⁰ so that an amendment which does not arbitrarily reduce the demand, but rather shows that plaintiff never did have, nor believed he had, a claim in excess of the jurisdictional amount is proper.²¹ It is proper for the court to refuse to allow an amendment increasing the amount claimed, where it is clearly an attempt to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court without regard to the substantiality of the claim.²² In New York, as appears supra notes 62, 63 of this section, where at the time of the commencement of the suit by the service of summons it appears that the amount demanded is in excess of the jurisdictional limitation of the court, as where the amount appears in a complaint served with the summons, or in the summons by a statement therein of the amount sued for or a reference therein to the demand to be made in the complaint, the court has no jurisdiction; and the case cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of the court by an amendment reducing the amount demanded in the complaint to an amount within the court's jurisdiction;²³ but where the summons is served without any complaint, and contains no statement of the amount sued for, the court has acquired jurisdiction, and may thereafter amend the complaint, if it demands judgment for more than the amount within the jurisdiction of the court.²⁴ If the amount involved is such as to give an inferior court jurisdiction, but insufficient to give jurisdiction to the tribunal in which the action is brought, plaintiff has no right to amend his complaint by adding a cause of action over which the court does have jurisdiction.²⁵

Failure to waive in original complaint immaterial

Failure of original demand to contain waiver of excess immaterial, after amendment of demand to include waiver of damages over jurisdictional amount.—Harris v. Roth, 143 A. 557, 6 N.J.Misc. 1006.

Amendment of amended petition

Where a petition claiming interest, which did not raise the total amount beyond the jurisdictional limit, was amended at a time when additional interest had accrued so as to raise the total amount above the maximum jurisdiction, the excess of interest may be waived and jurisdiction thus restored.—San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Barnett, 66 S.W. 474, 27 Tex.Civ.App. 498.

Contra dictum

It has been stated in a case in which such was not the fact that, if at the time the original petition was filed the total amount sued for, including the interest, had exceeded the jurisdiction of the court, the amendments thereafter filed, seeking to recover less than the jurisdictional amount, would have been unavailing.—*Rotan Grocery Co. v. Reference in summons to complaint
Where the summons, served with or without a complaint, although it does not state the amount for which judgment will be taken in the event of default, states, "for the relief demanded in the complaint," and the complaint, whether served with the summons or thereafter, demands judgment for an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, the court does not have jurisdiction, and the defect cannot be cured by amendment.—*Manasson v. After judgment

After judgment for plaintiff for amount within court's jurisdiction the court will deem complaint amended to demand amount within its jurisdiction.—Ussop v. American West African Line, 269 N.Y.S. 654, 151 Misc. 12.

25. Cal.—A. Hamburger & Sons v. Kice, 18 P.2d 115, 129 Cal.App. 63.

In some jurisdictions, in an action in which the amount claimed is within the jurisdiction of the court, the allowance of an amendment increasing the amount claimed to an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction will not oust the court of jurisdiction of the case, but the amendment will be treated as surplusage, or regarded as a nullity.²⁶ In other jurisdictions, the jurisdiction of the court will be tested by the allegations of the original petition, when the amended petition does not set up a new cause of action,²⁷ and by the amended petition when it does set up a new cause of action.²⁸ If the original pleadings allege an amount within the jurisdiction of the court, an amendment claiming damages which have accrued during the pendency of the action, thereby increasing the amount claimed to an amount in excess of the court's jurisdiction, will not oust the court of jurisdiction of the case;²⁹ nor will an amendment reducing the amount claimed to less than the jurisdictional amount deprive the court of jurisdiction;³⁰ but a supplemental petition which increases the original demand to an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of the court deprives the court of jurisdiction;³¹ and, as appears supra this section note 99, if the amount claimed is reduced to a sum below the jurisdiction of the court by rulings on demurrers addressed to the petition, the court will be deprived of jurisdiction. In still other jurisdictions, an amendment increasing the amount for which recovery is asked to an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of the court ousts the court of jurisdiction,³² and on an amendment to a complaint not stating a cause of action so as to show a cause of action for an amount below the jurisdiction of the court, a motion to dismiss on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction should be granted.³³

A plaintiff may amend his bill of particulars so as to make it conform to his declaration with respect to the amount demanded.³⁴

Mode of objecting to jurisdiction. To raise the question of the jurisdiction of the court where the amount in controversy appears on the face of the pleadings and is for an amount within the court's jurisdiction, that question should be made to appear by proper defensive pleading.³⁵ As appears in the title Abatement and Revival, § 16 a (2), the real amount involved in an action may be put in issue by a plea to the jurisdiction, although the apparent amount as shown by the pleading or record is within the jurisdictional limit; and where the claim asserted is on its face sufficient to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the court, the issue as to the bona fides of such claim must be raised by a plea to the jurisdiction. On the other hand, a general demurrer is sufficient to challenge the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the pleadings show an amount in controversy not within the jurisdiction of the court.³⁶ In an action in the United States district court, defendant has been denied leave to plead separately to the jurisdiction on the ground that the amount involved is less than the jurisdictional amount and that plaintiff's claim is fictitious, without prejudice to his right to plead to the merits and to assert any counterclaim.³⁷

Burden of proof. The burden of proof rests on the party bringing the action to show that the court in which it is filed has jurisdiction of it;³⁸ but where the complaint shows jurisdiction and a dismissal is sought for lack of jurisdiction, the burden of proof that the amount in controversy is not

Workmen's compensation cases. In suits to set aside a final ruling and decision of a workmen's compensation board for injuries to an employee, decisions holding that, for the purpose of determining the proper court in which the suit must be brought, the amount in controversy is the amount claimed before the board, not the amount awarded, and may be shown by direct allegations in the petition that the amount claimed by the employee before the board was a sum within the jurisdiction of the court,⁴⁰ or is the maximum amount of compensation allowed by the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act for the injury suffered, and may be shown by an allegation containing the claim filed, in which it is shown that it was of such a nature that the average weekly wage, when multiplied by the maximum time for which compensation may be allowed, would produce an amount within the jurisdiction of the court,⁴¹ have been disapproved and overruled.⁴² In suits to set aside the awards of such boards, the identity of the injury received by the employee for which he made claim before the board with the injury shown by his petition in court, rather than the amount of the claim as made before the board, is the controlling factor in determining the jurisdiction of the court;⁴³ and where the identity of the injury is established, the test of the court's jurisdiction of the suit with respect to the amount in controversy is to be determined by the allegations of fact in the petition.⁴⁴ In suits filed by insurers to set aside awards of such boards, the amount in controversy is the amount of the award made by the board when the claim filed with the board does not show the amount claimed, in dollars and cents or by a statement of facts from which the amount can definitely be determined;⁴⁵ and when the claim filed with the board does show the amount claimed, in dollars and cents or by a statement of facts from which the amount can definitely be determined, and the award of the board equals or exceeds in amount the amount shown by the claim, the amount of the award is the amount in controversy,⁴⁶ but if the award of the board is less in amount than that of the claim, the amount shown by the claim is the amount in controversy.⁴⁷ In suits filed by an injured employee to set aside a final ruling and decision of the board, it is not necessary, as a predicate of jurisdiction of the court in which such suit may be filed, that the claim filed with the board state, and the pleadings, show the amount claimed before the board by the employee or facts from which such amount can be definitely determined;⁴⁸ and the question of the Measure of claim held not evidently improper

In buyer's action for breach of warranty, the court cannot hold that it is evident from plaintiff's affidavit, stating that he arrived at his loss by deducting the amount for which he was able to dispose of the merchandise from the amount he paid defendant therefor, that in fixing his damages he adopted a wrong and purely arbitrary measure, and therefore had not shown his claim to be in excess of a lower court's jurisdiction.—Pasquinnelli v. Southern Macaroni Mfg. Co., 116 A. 372, 272 Pa. 468.

Slight evidence as to value held sufficient to support jurisdiction

In replevin for six thousand five hundred dollar note, where there was some evidence that the note was without value, it cannot be said that the municipal court had no jurisdiction because aggregate value was over one thousand dollars.—The Public Bank of New York City v. Rosendorf, 166 N.Y.S. 734.

Crouch, Civ.App., 113 S.W.2d 650, error dismissed.

Allegations held sufficient

(1) Petition alleging claimant's average weekly wage, that he was seventy-five per cent permanently disabled, and that he filed claim with board was sufficient to bring suit within district court's jurisdiction, although not directly alleging amount involved before board.—Welch v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co., Tex.Civ.App., 54 S.W.2d 1041, error dismissed.

(2) Where claim filed with industrial accident board stated that injury sustained was sprained back, and that claimant's wages were two hundred and fifty dollars per month, and allegations of petition in suit to set aside board's award denying compensation identified the cause of action with the claim filed before the board, the court had jurisdiction.—*Texas Indemnity Ins. jurisdiction of the court in such case is determined by the amount in controversy in the suit in accordance with the allegations of fact in the petition,⁴⁹ provided it is not made to appear that the averments were fraudulently made. In no case is the amount in controversy determined by the maximum amount of compensation which the law authorizes for the character of injury for which claim is filed,⁵⁰ nor by the amount of the claim filed with the board; and this is true whether the claim filed with the board shows or does not show the amount of the claim.⁵¹

4. ACTIONS UNDER LAWS OF OTHER STATES OR COUNTRIES

§ 70. In General

- a. Recognition of foreign law in general
- b. Extent of, and limitations on, recognition

a. Recognition of Foreign Law in General

Subject to some qualifications, the courts, on the ground, as the rule is ordinarily stated, of comity, assume jurisdiction of transitory actions arising under the laws of other states or of foreign countries, although such laws have in themselves no extraterritorial effect.

Notwithstanding the laws of a state have of themselves no extraterritorial force or effect,⁵² the courts of one state will, within limitations discussed

Essential jurisdictional connection

The amount of the claim before the board is immaterial on the issue of jurisdiction of the court selected to review the award, the only essential jurisdictional connection between the claim for compensation before the board and the suit to set aside the award being the identity of the injury of which complaint is made.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Wright, 97 S.W.2d 171, 128 Tex. 242, reversing, Civ.App., 56 S.W.2d 926—Booth v. Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n, Com.App., 123 S.W.2d 332, reversing *Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Computation of jurisdictional amount

(1) Computation may be based on the maximum claimed for an alleged injury.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Whiteside, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 767.

(2) Amount claimed for medical expenses constitutes part of the jurisdictional amount involved.—Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Whiteside, supra.

For injury to minor child

Even if action of parents to set aside an award of the industrial accident board denying compensation for daughter's death was one for compensation or earnings of minor child belonging to parents, where the most they could have recovered for accrued and unpaid compensation prior to daughter's death under pleadings was only three hundred and fifty dollars, district court did not have jurisdiction.—*Swain v. and enforced therein.⁵⁵ Laws of a foreign country also may in some cases be enforced.⁵⁶ The general principle herein involved is applicable to a right of action given by the law of another state or country for a tort committed therein⁵⁷ or on a contract which is implied in part or in whole under its laws,⁵⁸ and to many other causes of action which are treated specifically in other titles of this work.

Jurisdiction to hear and determine actions arising under foreign laws is not affected by the ultimate question of whether plaintiff will be found entitled to recover.⁵⁹

The enforcement by the courts of a state of causes of action arising under the laws of another state or of a foreign nation is ordinarily stated or recognized to be on the basis of comity,⁶⁰ although according to some authorities rights arising under a foreign law are enforced because the rule requiring such enforcement is a part of the law of the forum,⁶¹ and for a general discussion of the existence and limitations of the doctrine of comity reference is made to Conflict of Laws § 3.

In any event, the recognition of an obligation which arises under the law of another state or country is not regarded as giving the law of such state or country an extraterritorial application or effect.⁶²

b. Extent of, and Limitations on, Recognition

- (1) In general
- (2) Positive law of forum as limitation
- (3) Public policy of forum as limitation
- (4) Matters of procedure and remedies as limitations
- (5) Restrictions imposed by foreign law

(1) In General

The circumstances in, and extent to, which causes of action arising under foreign laws will be enforced is determinable by the sovereignty in which enforcement is sought. Plaintiff must plead and prove the foreign law under which he claims, and that he had a cause of action thereunder in the state having such law.

Except as determined by the full faith and credit requirement of the federal constitution, discussed in the C.J.S. title States § 9, the circumstances in, and extent to, which causes of action arising under the laws of other states or countries will be enforced are determinable by the particular sovereignty in which enforcement is sought.⁶³ Where the action sought to be enforced arose under a foreign statute, all provisions of the statute relating to rights and remedies will be considered by the court of the forum in determining whether it has jurisdiction of the action.⁶⁴

Pleading and proof. The statute of the state where the cause of action accrued should be set out in the declaration or complaint,⁶⁵ and plaintiff must be prepared to show the law of the state under which he claims the right asserted by him,⁶⁶ and that he had a cause of action which the courts of the state in which such cause of action accrued, under their view of the law at the time of such accrual, would have enforced.⁶⁷

(2) Positive Law of Forum as Limitation

The courts of a state will not enforce laws of another state or country which are repugnant to its own laws, or, under some authorities, which are not similar in character and purpose.

The courts of a state will not enforce laws of another state or country which are repugnant to its own laws.⁶⁸ Under some authorities, the statute on which a foreign cause of action is based must be similar in character and purpose to a statute of the forum to warrant assumption of the action,⁶⁹ but other authorities hold that dissimilarity between the law of a state or country where the cause of action arose and the law of the forum will not prevent enforcement of the cause of action unless the dissimilarity is so great as to amount to conflict or repugnancy.⁷⁰ The fact that the forum does not give a similar right has been held not to constitute such a dissimilarity,⁷¹ although there is authority

Courts will not assume jurisdiction of actions arising under foreign laws where enforcement thereof would be against the public policy of the forum, or, in other words against good morals, natural justice, or the general interests of the people of the forum; a mere difference between the lex loci and lex forum does not render enforcement of the lex loci opposed to public policy.

tion.⁷⁵ It does not mean merely sound or good policy.⁷⁶ Such policy is to be found in the constitution, statutes, and judicial decisions of the state.⁷⁷ The mere fact that a right of action given by the law of another state or country differs from that given by the forum, or that the forum does not give a similar right or remedy, does not render its enforcement opposed to public policy;⁷⁸ if the lex fori and the lex loci delicti are of the same character or concur in holding that an act is the subject of legal redress, assumption of jurisdiction is strongly, if not, conclusively shown not to be against the public policy of the state where the action is brought.⁷⁹

- N.Y.—Wilkoff v. Hirschel, 249 N.Y.S. 690, 232 App.Div. 193, affirmed and elsewhere in other ways, cannot be enforced by the courts of another state.⁸¹ However, the mere fact that the remedy available in the forum is not as complete as that in the state where the wrong occurred has been held not to justify a refusal to take jurisdiction.⁸²

(5) Restrictions Imposed by Foreign Law

Although there is contrary authority, the weight of authority seems to be that an action arising under the laws of one state will be entertained in another state only on the terms permitted by such laws. There is authority both affirming and denying that a statute permitting an action only in the state in which it arose will be enforced in other states. Courts of other states need not recognize legislation intended to operate only locally.

While compliance with statutory requirements imposed by the state under whose laws the cause of action arose has been held not a prerequisite to enforcement of the action in another state,⁸³ however, the mere fact that statutes of the state in which the cause of action arose provide for suspension of execution for a limited time does not preclude adjudication of the action in other states;⁸⁴ and the fact that the state in which the cause of action arose will not enforce against its own residents like causes of action arising in other states has been held immaterial as regards whether other states will enforce the action against their residents.⁸⁵

Statutory limitation of place for bringing action.

It has been held that a statute creating a right of action may impose the condition that an action thereon shall be brought in the courts of the state and not elsewhere,⁸⁶ and that such a provision will preclude an action on such right of action in any other state.⁸⁷ However, the weight of authority is that the legislature of a state cannot deny to one having a transitory cause of action originating in that state under one of its statutes the right to appeal to the courts of another state for the enforcement thereof.⁸⁸

Local causes of action. Courts of other states are not required to recognize a statute intended by the enacting legislature to be only local in its operation.⁸⁹

§ 71. Penal Laws

Courts will not enforce penal laws of other states or countries. This rule has been held applicable to penalties imposed for the benefit of private individuals, but according to another view applies only to penalties by or on behalf of the state or a subdivision thereof as a punishment for violation of public or criminal law.

A state cannot compel a nonresident to bring suit only within its courts for personal injuries suffered in the state.—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Mills, 116 S.W. 852, 53 Tex. Civ.App. 359—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, Tex.Civ.App., 99 S.W. 190.

Solicitation of business in another state

Courts will not decline to entertain action of transitory nature arising in a foreign state, brought by citizen of such state, merely because statute of foreign state prohibits solicitation of business of prosecuting such actions without state.—Hovel v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 206 N.W. 710, 165 Minn. 449.

of one state will not enforce the penal laws of another state,⁹⁰ or of a foreign country.⁹¹ In some cases, this rule has been considered applicable to penalties imposed for the benefit of individuals whose private rights have been infringed.⁹² However, a number of cases hold that the rule applies only to statutes imposing penalties recoverable by or on behalf of the state or some political subdivision thereof, as a punishment for some violation of public or criminal law,⁹³ and that the mere fact that a statute was passed as a penal one or as a police regulation does not necessarily preclude the enforcement in another state of a purely private right conferred thereby.⁹⁴

How character of statute determined. It has been considered that it is for the courts of the forum to determine whether a statute is penal in its nature so as to prevent its enforcement in a foreign jurisdiction, or whether it merely provides for the enforcement of private statutory rights of a transitory nature.⁹⁵ On the other hand, it has also been held that, where the supreme court of a state has decided that a liability imposed by a statute of such state is a penal liability, such liability will not be enforced in another state.⁹⁶

§ 72. Revenue Laws

Ordinarily, a state court will not enforce the revenue laws of another state or country.

"[The] question whether a statute of one state which in some aspects may be called penal is a penal law in the international sense, so that it cannot be enforced in the courts of another state, depends upon the question whether its purpose is to punish an offense against the public justice of the state, or to afford a private remedy to a person injured by the wrongful act."—Wellman v. As a general rule, a state court will not enforce the revenue laws of another state or country.⁹⁷ Thus, it has been considered that an action cannot be maintained in one state for a tax imposed under the law of another state.⁹⁸ However, it has been held that a court of probate will not refuse to direct a just and equitable administration of an estate within its jurisdiction merely because such direction will result in the enforcement of revenue laws of another state.⁹⁹

5. JURISDICTION OF THE PERSON

§ 73. In General

Generally speaking, jurisdiction of the parties is essential to a court's power to determine a legal controversy and jurisdiction of the person is absolutely necessary in personal actions. Such jurisdiction is obtainable only as to persons subject to the territorial jurisdiction of the court and, conversely, may attach as to all such persons.

Jurisdiction of the parties is in general essential to the power of a court to determine a legal controversy,¹ and, in actions affecting purely personal rights, jurisdiction of the person is absolutely necessary.² Jurisdiction of the person may be acquired by a court of the state only in respect of a person at the time subject to the jurisdiction of the state courts;³ such jurisdiction is dependent, broadly speaking, on the person's presence within the state,⁴ and is not conferred merely by the fact that the court has jurisdiction of his property.⁵ Conversely, civil and criminal jurisdiction will attach to all persons found within the state, whether their residence be permanent or temporary.⁶ In some circumstances, lack of jurisdiction of the person may be asserted only by the person over whom such jurisdiction may be lacking.⁷

Joint and several defendants. Where an action is brought against persons over whom the court has no jurisdiction, the fact that another person over whom the court has jurisdiction but against whom no cause of action is alleged is joined as a defendant will not confer jurisdiction over the other defendants;⁸ and, where the cause of action against each of several defendants is separate and distinct, the acquisition of jurisdiction over one defendant does not give the court jurisdiction over another.⁹

On the other hand, lack of jurisdiction over one co-defendant may not defeat jurisdiction over the other codefendant.¹⁰

§ 74. Nonresidents

Residence within the territorial jurisdiction of the court is not, in the absence of statute, essential to personal jurisdiction. However, a court cannot compel nonresident officers of a foreign corporation to obey decrees respecting the management thereof, nor make orders affecting substantial rights of a foreign corporation not a party.

In the absence of statute, it is not of itself sufficient to defeat the jurisdiction of a state court that a party to an action is a resident of another state,¹¹ and even inferior courts in a state may have jurisdiction of a cause of action, although both parties may not reside within the territorial limits of such court's particular jurisdiction.¹² However, the courts of one state cannot compel the officers of a foreign corporation residing in another state to obey their decrees respecting the management of the affairs of the corporation,¹³ and, a fortiori, a court cannot make an order affecting the substantial rights of a foreign corporation in an action to which it is not a party.¹⁴ Of course, a court cannot acquire jurisdiction of nonresidents by unauthorized acts of its officers.¹⁵

In the absence of a legal restraint, courts will assume jurisdiction of actions by nonresidents; although, by statute, he by bringing an action may become amenable to an action on a cause of action available as a set-off or counterclaim.

In the absence of some legal restraint,¹⁶ courts will assume jurisdiction of actions by nonresidents to enable them to assert their rights;¹⁷ and considerations of convenience have been held to be im-

§ 76. — Actions against Nonresidents

State courts may entertain an action against a nonresident on acquiring jurisdiction of his person by service of process on him within the court's territorial jurisdiction or within the state, or by his voluntary submission to its jurisdiction, or, in the absence thereof, in some circumstances, to the extent of his property situated in the state, but not otherwise.

State courts cannot take jurisdiction of actions against nonresidents who own no property within the state, have not been personally served with process therein,²⁰ and have not voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of its courts;²¹ but, while jurisdiction of personal actions cannot be acquired against nonresidents who have not been personally served with process within the state,²² or voluntarily submitted to the court's jurisdiction,²³ a court may entertain an action against a nonresident on acquiring jurisdiction of his person²⁴ by service of process on him within the territorial jurisdiction of the court or within the state,²⁵ or by his voluntary submission to its jurisdiction.²⁶ The fact that a nonresident is the owner of property situated within the state does not give the state courts jurisdiction over his person,²⁷ but they may have jurisdiction in some circumstances of actions against a nonresident to the extent of such property.²⁸ A nonresident over whose person jurisdic-

tion has been acquired is in court for every purpose connected with the suit, and is charged with notice of any action the court may take pending the same;²⁹ and having acquired jurisdiction, the court will retain it for the purpose of administering justice to resident citizens, and will not send them to foreign jurisdictions to seek redress.³⁰

Persons doing business within the jurisdiction are, under some statutes, deemed residents for the purpose of being sued.³¹

Nonresidents jointly liable. A court may assume jurisdiction over an action against a nonresident over whose person it has acquired jurisdiction, although it has not acquired jurisdiction over the person of a nonresident jointly liable with him.³²

Statutory limitations on inferior courts. The jurisdiction of inferior courts is sometimes limited by statute to actions brought against persons who are residents within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.³³ So by statute, jurisdiction of actions against nonresidents may require personal service on the nonresident within the territorial jurisdiction of the court at the time the action is commenced.³⁴

§ 77. — Actions between Nonresidents

- a. In general
- b. Between nonresident and foreign corporation
- c. Between foreign corporations

a. In General

The courts of a state may in their sound discretion assume jurisdiction of actions between nonresidents or foreigners. Under some authorities, the doctrine of forum non conveniens is to be applied cautiously, and this is true generally in respect of actions growing out of commercial transactions or contracts; but there is a contrary view in respect of causes of action in tort arising outside the state.

The courts of a state will in many instances assume jurisdiction of actions between nonresidents, either where the subject matter of the controversy is in reference to rights in or to property situated within the state, or where the cause of action, although it accrued in another state, is transitory in its nature and the parties are personally within the jurisdiction of the court;³⁵ so state courts will in many instances assume jurisdiction of actions between foreigners where defendant can be found within the state and process there personally served

Nonresident stockholders of a corporation in receivership in a court of the state are within the jurisdiction of such court as regards their claims against the corporation.—In re Receivership of Cotton Queen Oil Co., 78 So. 130, 143 La. 1.

Necessity of seizure

(1) Seizure of the property is necessary to such jurisdiction. Idaho.—Welch v. Morris, 291 P. 1048, 49 Idaho 781.

La.—Levy v. Collins, 38 So. 966, 115 La. 204—Gele v. Cotonio, 3 La.A. (Orleans) 165.

Miss.—Aldridge v. First Nat. Bank, 144 So. 469, 165 Miss. 1.

(2) Thus, seizure of realty is necessary to jurisdiction of an action against a nonresident for breach of a contract to sell the realty.—Aldridge v. First Nat. Bank, supra.

Service by publication may be sufficient service in such circumstances.—St. John v. Parsons, 7 N.E. 2d 1013, 54 Ohio App. 420—15 C.J. p 789 note 75 [c].

Pleading

It is not necessary to allege, in an action brought in the district court against a nonresident, that defendant may be found in the county where the action is brought, or that he has property in the county where the action is brought, if in fact he has property in such county.—Whitehead v. Cox, 218 P. 867, 95 Okl. 198.

(2) Under other statutes, on the other hand, the judgment of such a court has been held not void for lack of jurisdiction because the residence of defendant does not appear.—Dodge Mfg. Co. v. Nassau Show Case Co., 61 N.Y.S. 111, 44 App.Div. 603.

on him.³⁶ However, in the absence of statute,³⁷ courts are not obliged to assume such jurisdiction, but are to exercise a sound discretion in the matter,³⁸ to be governed by broad considerations of the relationship between states or nations,³⁹ of convenience,⁴⁰ and of justice.⁴¹ Nevertheless, some authorities take the view that the doctrine of forum non conveniens is to be applied with caution,⁴² and, in accordance with this view, courts do not ordinarily refuse to entertain actions between nonresidents on a cause of action growing out of a commercial transaction or contract,⁴³ unless special reasons are shown why they should not do so,⁴⁴ even where the contract was made or to be performed outside the state.⁴⁵ So courts sometimes assume jurisdiction of actions in tort, whether the

Other matters of convenience

In determining whether it should retain jurisdiction of foreign cause of action between nonresident litigants, court may consider fact that local courts are overcrowded and that if action is entertained, other similar litigation may be invited, all to delay of citizen litigants and to great expense of commonwealth.

b. Between Nonresident and Foreign Corporation

on causes of action arising either within or outside the state, although the exercise of, or refusal to exercise, jurisdiction in particular instances has been held to be a matter for the court's sound discretion, at least where the cause of action arose outside the state.

Either under express authority of statute or merely in the absence of statutory restrictions, courts are generally held to possess power to assume jurisdiction of actions by nonresidents against foreign corporations.⁵¹ This is true, especially, where the cause of action arose within the state,⁵² but it is generally held also, although there is some authority to the contrary,⁵³ that state courts may assume jurisdiction of actions on transitory causes of action arising outside the state,⁵⁴ where the corporation is doing or authorized to do business,⁵⁵ or

In New York

(1) Under a statute authorizing nonresidents to maintain actions against foreign corporations doing business in the state, the courts may in a proper case assume jurisdiction of such actions whether the cause of action arose within or without the state.—Murnan v. Wabash Ry. Co., 158 N.E. 508, 246 N.Y. 244, 54 A.L.R. 1522, reversing 221 N.Y.S. 322, 220 App.Div. 218, affirmed 226 N.Y.S. 393, 222 App.Div. 833—Cohen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 269 N.Y.S. 667, 150 Misc. 450—Randle v. Inecto, Inc., 226 N.Y.S. 686, 131 Misc. 261—Jacobsen v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, 217 N.Y.S. 856, 128 Misc. 138.

(2) Conversely, there are cases holding that the court may or must refuse jurisdiction where the corporation is not doing business in the state at the time the action is commenced.—Gaboury v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 231 N.Y.S. 630, 225 App.Div. 145, affirming Jacobs v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 228 N.Y.S. 705, 132 Misc. 144, and reversed on other grounds Gaboury v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 165 N.E. 275, 250 N.Y. 233—Richter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 205 N.Y.S. 128, 123 Misc. 234—Davis v. Julius Kessler & Co., 194 N.Y.S. 9, 118 Misc. 292.

(3) However, the fact that the statute provides that jurisdiction of such actions may be assumed only where the foreign corporation is doing business in the state has been held not to preclude assumption of such jurisdiction in special circumstances after the corporation has ceased to do business in the state.—Simons v. Inecto, Inc., 275 N.Y.S. 501, 242 App.Div. 275.

(4) The statute is not retroactive.—Fairclough v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 N.Y.S. 862, 171 App.Div. 496—Morrison v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 164 N.Y.S. 258.

(5) Thus, it does not confer on the court jurisdiction of an action previously commenced.—Fairclough

v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 N.Y.S. 862, 171 App.Div. 496, reversing 155 N.Y. S. 899.

(6) Under a statute providing that a nonresident may maintain an action against a foreign corporation only on a cause of action arising in the state, or in certain other circumstances, the courts have been held without jurisdiction of actions arising outside the state and not otherwise coming within the terms of the statute.—Fairclough v. Southern Pac. R. Co., supra—15 C.J. p 791 note 96 [b], [c], [e], p 792 note 97 [b].

(7) So, apart from statute, the courts have been held without jurisdiction over an action brought by a nonresident against a foreign corporation on a cause of action arising outside the state.—Klunck v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 133 N.Y.S. 207, 148 App.Div. 788.

Considerations not warranting refusal

(1) The fact that plaintiff will not be injured seriously by a refusal.—State v. Grimm, 143 S.W. 483, 239 Mo. 135.

(2) The fact that assumption of jurisdiction will result in considerable expense to the corporation or the state, or both.—Bright v. Wheelock, 20 S.W.2d 684, 323 Mo. 840, 66 A.L.R. 263.

59. N.Y.—Simons v. Inecto, Inc., 275 N.Y.S. 501, 242 App.Div. 275.

Appointment of receiver

A court will decline to assume jurisdiction of an action by a nonresident for the appointment of a receiver of a foreign corporation's property pending the filing of an action in another state to have the corporation declared insolvent.—Fehr v. Black Petroleum Corporation, 229 P. 1048, 103 Okl. 241.

Inecto, Inc.*, 226 N.Y.S. 686, 131 Misc. 261.

Under New York statute

(1) Providing that a nonresident may maintain an action against a foreign corporation in certain circumstances, the courts have been held not precluded from refusing, in their discretion, to entertain such an action, at least where the cause of action arose outside the state.—Waisikoski v. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., 127 N.E. 923, 228 N.Y. 581, affirming 159 N.Y.S. 906, 173 App.Div. 538, and 165 N.Y.S. 1117, 178 App.Div. 932—Waisikoski v. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., 159 N.Y.S. 906, 173 App.Div. 538—Jacobsen v. U. S. Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, 217 N.Y.S. 856, 128 Misc. 138—Richter v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 205 N.Y.S. 128, 123 Misc. 234—Bagdon v. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., 165 N.Y.S. 910, 178 App. Div. 662.

(2) However, in at least one case, such statute has been held to prevent the court from refusing in its discretion to assume jurisdiction of an action by a nonresident against a foreign corporation doing business in the state to recover damages for a breach of contract.—Crane, Hayes & Co. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 225 N.Y.S. 775, 131 Misc. 71.

Under Federal Employers' Liability Act, a state court is not precluded from exercising discretion as to whether it will assume or refuse to assume jurisdiction of an action arising under the act in another state.—Murnan v. Wabash Ry. Co., 158 N.E. 508, 246 N.Y. 244, 54 A.L.R. 1522, reversing 221 N.Y.S. 322, 220 App.Div. 218, affirmed 226 N.Y.S. 393, 222 App.Div. 833.

Inconvenience of obtaining witnesses from without state is no ground for dismissing action by foreign corporation against foreign corporation doing business within state.—Crane, Hayes & Co. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 225 N.Y.S. 775, 131 Misc. 71.

Action by foreign corporation against nonresident. A state court has been held to have jurisdiction of an action by a foreign corporation against a nonresident natural person, although the cause of action did not arise in, or out of business conducted in, the state.⁶¹

c. Between Foreign Corporations

A state court may assume jurisdiction of actions between foreign corporations on causes of action arising within the state, or, under some statutes, or in some jurisdictions, in the absence of statutory restrictions, on transitory causes of action arising outside the state, although the exercise of, or refusal to exercise, its jurisdiction in particular instances has been held to be a matter for the court's sound discretion, at least where the cause of action arose outside the state.

Subject to statutory limitations, a state court may entertain jurisdiction of an action between foreign corporations on a cause of action arising within the state.⁶² Likewise, under some statutes, or, in some jurisdictions, in the absence of statutory restrictions, courts may assume jurisdiction of actions on transitory causes of action arising outside the state,⁶³ where defendant corporation is doing business in the state,⁶⁴ but there is other authority holding that jurisdiction cannot be assumed if the cause of action is unrelated to business transacted in the state by defendant.⁶⁵ So, a state court has been held to have power to entertain jurisdiction of actions on contracts made in the state.⁶⁶ However, in the absence of a statute to other effect, whether a court will exercise or refuse to exercise its jurisdiction in particular instances has been held to be a matter for the sound discretion of the court, at least where the cause of action arose outside the state,⁶⁷ to be governed by broad considerations of convenience, justice, and public policy.⁶⁸ Where the circumstances in which actions between foreign corporations may be maintained are specified by statute, the power of courts to take jurisdiction in other circumstances is excluded.⁶⁹

§ 78. — Joinder of Residents as Defendants

In the absence of statute, a court may assume jurisdiction of an action on a joint obligation if one obligor resides within its territorial jurisdiction, although another resides outside it, but cannot, in the absence of statute, acquire jurisdiction of the nonresident's person. Jurisdiction of a nonresident cannot be acquired by improper joinder of a resident, or may be wanting in event of discontinuance or dismissal of the action as to, or judgment in favor of, the resident. The joinder of a resident will not confer jurisdiction of the person of a nonresident of the state.

While, in the absence of a statute,⁷⁰ a court may assume jurisdiction of an action on a joint obligation where one of the obligors resides within the court's territorial jurisdiction, although the other resides outside thereof,⁷¹ the jurisdiction of a strictly local court ordinarily cannot be extended to persons outside of its territorial jurisdiction by the mere circumstance that one or more of the persons who are jointly liable happen to reside or to be within the jurisdiction.⁷² Under some statutes, however, if an action against several defendants is brought in a court whose territorial jurisdiction does not extend throughout the entire state, the fact that one or more of defendants reside within the territorial limits of its jurisdiction authorizes the court to take jurisdiction over other defendants who reside elsewhere in the state,⁷³ the process of the court under such circumstances running outside of the territorial limits of its jurisdiction,⁷⁴ although service on defendant residing within the territorial jurisdiction of the court is frequently made a prerequisite to valid service on a joint defendant outside of such jurisdiction.⁷⁵ However, it has been held, under constitutional limitations, that the legislature cannot extend the territorial jurisdiction of a municipal court by providing for the service of original process on a nonresident outside of the corporate limits of the municipality, where a joint defendant residing in the city has been served with process therein.⁷⁶

Jurisdiction as against a nonresident cannot be acquired by an improper joinder, as a defendant, of one residing within the jurisdiction,⁷⁷ but in order to give such jurisdiction defendant who resides in, or is served with process in, the county where the action is brought, must have a real and substantial interest in the subject of the action, adverse to plaintiff;⁷⁸ and if no cause of action is set

Cause of action arising within state

Under a statute authorizing such an action where the cause of action arose within the state, the right of action must be local with reference to the state.—Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., 62 N.E. 587, 169 N.Y. 506, 88 Am.S.R. 608, affirming 63 N.Y.S. 987, 50 App.Div. 273, and affirmed 24 S.Ct. 92, 191 U.S. 373, 48 L.Ed. 225—15 C.J. p 791 note 94.

Statute held to preclude assumption

(1) Where the cause of action did not arise, nor relate to a contract made or property situated, in the state, and defendant corporation was not doing business in the state.—Swift & Co. v. Karlina, 157 N.E. 861, 245 N.Y. 570, affirming 220 N.Y.S. 933, 219 App.Div. 821—McCauley v. Georgia Railroad Bank, 203 N.Y.S.

(2) Where the cause of action did not arise, or the subject of the action was not situated, in the state.—Blue Ridge Power Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 115 S.E. 306, 122 S.C. 222.

Action by resident assignee

(1) However, where the action is one which may be maintained by a resident, the fact that the resident is the assignee of a foreign corporation precluded from maintaining the action does not preclude him from maintaining it.—Ball v. Nippon Yusen (Kabushiki Kaisha), 253 N.Y.S. 260, 142 Misc. 201, affirmed 256 N.Y.S. 298, 143 Misc. 243, following Brown v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 256 N.Y.S. 294, 143 Misc. 239—McCauley v. Georgia Railroad Bank, 203 N.Y. S. 550, 122 Misc. 632, affirmed 205 N.Y.S. 935, 209 App.Div. 886.

(2) It is sufficient that the assignee is a bona fide resident; that the assignment was without consideration and for the sole purpose of bringing the action is immaterial.—McCauley v. Georgia Railroad Bank, supra.

forth against defendant served within the jurisdiction, judgment cannot be rendered against defendant served outside of the jurisdiction.⁷⁹ It has been held that before a judgment can be rendered against defendant served with process outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the court, some disposition should be made of the action as to defendant served within the jurisdiction;⁸⁰ and, while jurisdiction with respect to nonresident defendants is not lost by reason of the fact that the verdict is in favor of defendants who reside within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction,⁸¹ there is authority for the view that where the action is dismissed as to resident defendant, the court has no jurisdiction to render judgment by default against nonresident defendant,⁸² or that where, before trial, a nolle prosequi is entered as to resident defendant, this is ground for abatement as to nonresident defendant.⁸³ It is sometimes provided by statute that no judgment can be rendered against defendant served outside of the jurisdiction where the action is discontinued or dismissed as to defendants served within the jurisdiction, or where judgment is rendered in their favor, unless defendant served outside of the jurisdiction has appeared and failed to object.⁸⁴

Residents and nonresidents of state as joint defendants. Although a state court would not have jurisdiction of an action, if all the defendants were nonresidents of the state, the fact that one or more of several defendants are residents may authorize it to take jurisdiction of the action although the other defendants are nonresidents.⁸⁵ In order for this rule to apply, resident defendant must have a real interest in the matter in controversy,⁸⁶ but jurisdiction may be acquired although the rights of nonresident defendant are wholly distinct from those of resident defendant.⁸⁷ Where a court is given jurisdiction of actions between nonresidents, or between nonresidents and citizens, such jurisdiction extends to an action by a nonresident against several joint defendants, some of whom are citizens, and others of whom are nonresidents.⁸⁸ However, the joinder of a resident as a defendant cannot confer jurisdiction over nonresident defendants who are not personally served, and do not appear, so as to empower the court to enter a personal judgment against them.⁸⁹

§ 79. Political Corporations

A county or parish may be sued in any court of proper or competent jurisdiction within its territorial limits.

D. MODE OF ACQUIRING JURISDICTION

§ 80. In General

Methods recognized or prescribed by law must be followed for the court to obtain jurisdiction.

It is a general rule that every state may, within its constitutional authority, prescribe the manner in which its courts shall acquire jurisdiction;⁹¹ and if a new jurisdiction is created by statute without its form of proceeding being prescribed, such jurisdiction may pursue its own forms and regulations if not inconsistent with the laws of the land.⁹² In any case, due modes of procedure must be pursued in order that the court may obtain jurisdiction,⁹³ and where the mode of acquiring jurisdiction is prescribed by statute compliance therewith is essential or the proceedings will be a nullity,⁹⁴ although a failure to conform to the statute literally may be deemed to be an unimportant variation not affecting the jurisdiction of the court.⁹⁵ On the other hand, if jurisdiction is acquired in the manner prescribed by the statute it cannot be questioned within the state.⁹⁶

As a general rule, jurisdiction must be fairly acquired,⁹⁷ and if a thing must be done in order to attach jurisdiction, it must be lawfully done.⁹⁸

Conditional jurisdiction. In some states, a conditional jurisdiction is sometimes acquired upon the granting of a provisional remedy,⁹⁹ which jurisdiction, as appears in § 93 infra, is subject to be divested by failure to do certain acts within a specified time.

§ 81. Court Cannot Act Sua Sponte

A court cannot of its own motion assume jurisdiction.

A court cannot of its own motion assume jurisdiction in a particular matter; it is necessary that some person should in some legal way invoke its action.¹ However, it is not always required that the jurisdiction of the court be invoked by formal pleadings.²

§ 82. Jurisdiction of the Action; Pleadings

While jurisdiction is acquired by the filing of pleadings presenting a cause within the court's potential jurisdiction regardless of the sufficiency of the pleadings in other respects, the court may refuse to take jurisdiction where it appears or is shown that false statements are made for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction.

As is stated in Corpus Juris, jurisdiction of a particular action is acquired by the filing of pleadings which show the case to be within the general class of cases which the court has jurisdiction to hear and determine,³ and a petition or complaint which shows this is sufficient to give jurisdiction, although it is defective in other respects.⁴ On the other hand, the mere form of pleading cannot give to a court jurisdiction of a subject otherwise foreign to its jurisdiction.⁵

Fraudulent statement of cause of action. If plaintiff falsely states facts, either as constituting his cause of action or with regard to the amount in controversy, for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, and this manifestly appears to the court, it is said that it is the duty of the court to interfere ex mero motu and to prevent a fraud on its jurisdiction,⁶ although, if the fact of an intentional fraud is not apparent, it is held that the matter must be specially pleaded,⁷ before answer to the merits is made,⁸ and the question on the plea is one to be submitted to the jury.⁹

- b. Defendant

a. Plaintiff

Facts stated by plaintiff

(2) It has been said, however, that "the power of a court . . . to pronounce judgment, when proceeding according to the course of the common law, does not necessarily depend upon the existence or the filing of written pleadings by the parties."—Johnson v. Miller, 50 Ill. App. 60, 70.

pending for the purpose of giving the court jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, where all the parties appear as plaintiffs as well as when they appear as parties plaintiff and defendant.¹¹ However, where an unauthorized person brings an action in the name of another who has not consented thereto, the court does not acquire jurisdiction of plaintiff.¹²

b. Defendant

- (1) In general
- (2) Sending process out of jurisdiction

(1) In General

Generally jurisdiction over defendant may and must be acquired, in the absence of his voluntary submission thereto, by proper and fairly obtained service of process, actual or constructive, regardless of the sufficiency of the proof or return thereof, and jurisdiction acquired without personal service, as by seizure of property, confers no power to render personal judgment against defendant.

To authorize a court to proceed, it must acquire jurisdiction over defendant in some mode authorized by law, by service or other means,¹³ and, as appears in the C.J.S. title Judgments § 19, also 33 C.J. p 1074 note 43—p 1075 note 59, a judgment rendered without acquiring such jurisdiction is a nullity. So the rule prevails that, in the absence of defendant's voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the court, service of process or the prescribed legal or statutory notice is always a prerequisite to jurisdiction over either the person or the property,¹⁴

(1) Generally.—Gordy v. Levison & Co., 122 S.E. 234, 157 Ga. 670—15 C.J. p 798 note 60 [b].

Plaintiff always in court

A plaintiff, although not actually present in person or by attorney, is always in court as affects court's jurisdiction to rule on motions, demurrers, etc.—Christ v. Jovanoff, 152 N. E. 2, 84 Ind.App. 676, denying rehearing 151 N.E. 26, 84 Ind.App. 676.

Notice to parties concerned

It is a general rule that courts will not adjudicate matters involving conflicting rights until all parties directly concerned have been actually or constructively notified.—Ackerman v. Union & New Haven Trust Co., 100 A. 22, 91 Conn. 500.

Principal and nominal defendants

Where the court lacks personal jurisdiction of the principal defendants the fact that the court has jurisdiction of a merely nominal party defendant does not give the court jurisdiction of the case.—Reynolds, etc., Mortg. Co. v. Martin, 42 S.E. 796, 116 Ga. 495.

and the statutory mode of service or of giving notice must be followed,¹⁵ including requirements as to time.¹⁶ Conversely, where a defendant has properly been served with process, the court has jurisdiction of his person.¹⁷ Also, as is stated in § 85 c infra, the court may acquire such jurisdiction by reason of defendant's voluntary submission thereto, but it is held that a person's knowledge of the existence of an action does not supply the want of compliance with the statutory or legal requirements as to service,¹⁸ and that a person's mere presence in court does not give jurisdiction to enter a judgment against him when he was not brought there by any legal means.¹⁹

tive service as well as by personal service.²⁰ So, as against a defendant within the state who conceals himself so as to avoid service of process, substituted service may be authorized and is sufficient.²¹

Service obtained by fraud or improper means. It is well established as a general rule that in a civil case a court will not take jurisdiction based on a service of process on a defendant who was brought within the reach of its process wrongfully or fraudulently, or by deceit or any other improper device,²² provided, of course, the wrong or deceit is chargeable to plaintiff.²³ This rule is based not on a lack of jurisdiction but on the view that it is improper for a court to exercise a jurisdiction so obtained.²⁴

the fact of service and not the proof thereof²⁵ or the sufficiency of the return²⁶ which gives a court jurisdiction, it is otherwise where the statute makes proof of service a condition precedent to the jurisdiction which it specially confers.²⁷

A seizure of property of a defendant may, under the rules stated in § 84 infra, give jurisdiction of the cause, although there has been no personal service on defendant; but such jurisdiction extends only to the ascertainment of the obligation and the subjection of the property seized thereto and not to the rendition of any personal judgment against defendant.²⁸

(2) Sending Process Out of Jurisdiction

Service of process out of the territorial jurisdiction of a court confers no jurisdiction to render personal judgment against the party so served except where it is otherwise specially and lawfully provided by statute or where there is a lawful waiver or consent to such service.

Service of process out of the territorial jurisdiction of the court from which it issues, at common law, is a nullity,²⁹ for the process of a court ordinarily has no force outside of its jurisdiction,³⁰ and the sovereignty of the state itself does not embrace authority to control the manner of executing process to the extent of making lawful any service against a person without the jurisdiction of the court as a basis for a personal judgment.³¹ This rule generally applies to state,³² to county,³³ and to district³⁴ courts, and also to inferior courts of municipalities.³⁵ However, where it is specially and lawfully provided by statute, a court of limited territorial jurisdiction may be authorized to send its process to other territories within the state,³⁶ and extraterritorial service may confer jurisdiction where the party so served lawfully consents thereto,³⁷ or waives his right to object.³⁸

§ 84. Jurisdiction of the Res

Jurisdiction of the res is generally obtained by a fairly effected seizure of the property under legal process, with constructive service of process on the persons whose rights therein are affected, but in some proceedings constructive seizure, or the mere situs of the property within the territory, may be sufficient to confer jurisdiction.

As a general rule, jurisdiction of the res or property is obtained by a seizure under legal process of the court whereby it is held to abide such order as the court may make,³⁹ and with respect to the persons whose rights in the property are to be affected jurisdiction may be obtained by constructive service of process,⁴⁰ it not being necessary that they should be brought within the reach of the process of the court,⁴¹ or should receive actual notice.⁴² The mere fact that property is within the jurisdiction of the court is not sufficient to justify an action in personam against defendant where he cannot be served with process; the property itself must be brought before the court.⁴³

With respect to proceedings in rem and quasi in rem, the basis of the jurisdiction is the seizure of the property on which the judgment is to operate, and such jurisdiction cannot be acquired except by a lawful seizure,⁴⁴ unless the action or proceeding is of such a character that the mere situs of the property to be affected within the territorial jurisdiction of the court is sufficient to confer jurisdiction,⁴⁵ as, for instance, in administration proceedings or condemnation proceedings.⁴⁶ Accordingly such jurisdiction cannot be acquired where there is no property of defendant within the state over which the court can exercise its authority.⁴⁷

b. Limitations of Rule

The rule that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent is sometimes held inapplicable, as where a statute authorizes such consent or where jurisdiction is reacquired by consent after divestiture, and generally if the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter, its exercise in a particular case may be conferred by consent.

The general rule, stated in subdivision a of this section, that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent has in particular circumstances been held inapplicable, as in the case of certain orders not involving the exercise of power of the court,⁶³ or, in the case of an exercise of jurisdiction in an unauthorized manner.⁶⁴ Also, in some cases, a court may exercise jurisdiction acquiesced in by the par-

63. Sale of real estate

An order for the sale of real estate entered in a court which had no authority to make it, but reciting that it was made by the consent of the parties, has been held to be good in support of the sale on the grounds that the sale was not made by virtue of any power exercised by the court, but exclusively by the authority of the agreement of the parties, and that the principle that consent could not confer jurisdiction of the subject matter had no application.—International Trust Co. v. Keokuk Electric St. R., etc., Co., 57 N.W. 712, 90 Iowa 90.

64. As bar to relief in another state

Where consent to the exercise of judicial power, in a manner not authorized by statute, is relied on as a bar to equitable relief demanded in another state, it should be made to appear clearly that the res of the equity so demanded was within the contemplation of the consenting parties, and was considered by the court when it acted on their consent. Such consent, and the action of the court based thereon, should not be extended by construction so as to defeat a clear equity of either consenting party in the courts of another state; but, on the other hand, a technical rule of construction should not be applied to such a consent where this would defeat a clear equity.—Bodie v. Bates, 146 N.W. 1002, 95 Neb. 757, L.R.A.1915E 421.

Statute authorizing consent. The general rule that consent cannot confer jurisdiction may be obviated by some provision of local law,⁶⁶ as where jurisdiction is restricted to a certain amount, but the parties are specially permitted to agree to extend the jurisdiction to a larger amount,⁶⁷ or where a statute permits a court to entertain jurisdiction of a suit properly triable in another county if the parties fail to raise the defect by demurrer or answer.⁶⁸ Even in such cases it is considered that the necessary consent must be given in the manner prescribed by law,⁶⁹ although it is held that, if the consent was actually given, the judgment is valid even though no record was made of the fact.⁷⁰

Consent to exercise of existing jurisdiction in particular case. Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter, jurisdiction over the particular action may be conferred by consent,⁷¹ as by a party's act in invoking or submitting to the jurisdiction of the court;⁷² and where jurisdiction has attached and the cause of action or subject matter is legally and properly within the power and cognizance of the court, it may proceed on consent or stipulation with reference to the matters before it.⁷³ In such case, the parties cannot later complain or withdraw the consent thus given.⁷⁴

The principle as to consent has been held to be applicable only to the question of general jurisdiction to adjudicate as to the subject matter and not to the question whether the particular facts of the case bring it within that conceded jurisdiction.⁷⁵ It has also been asserted that the rule that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent does not cover cases where the agreement of the parties is in effect only waiving the ordinary process by which the power of the court is invoked,⁷⁶ especially so where the court has general jurisdiction over the subject matter and has proceeded to final judgment without objection taken.⁷⁷ So, parties who consent that an

65. Where jurisdictional facts are properly alleged and thus properly appear on the record, and the parties proceed to trial on the pleadings which go to the merits, and particularly, when the jurisdictional facts are not subsequently put in issue by defendant or seriously denied, the case will not ordinarily be dismissed for want of jurisdiction, where the proofs do not create a legal certainty that it is not within the jurisdiction.—William H. order of court be made have been held to be obligated thereby, even though the court had no power to make such order.⁷⁸ It is also held that where jurisdiction depends on the facts pleaded, the parties may stipulate as to the existence of such facts.⁷⁹

Reacquisition of jurisdiction after divestiture. In some circumstances, a court may, as a result of consent of the parties to proceed with the action, reacquire jurisdiction previously lost by it.⁸⁰ So, where the court once had jurisdiction, although the power may have been executed so that without consent of the parties it could not change its judgment or decree, the jurisdiction may be restored by consent.⁸¹

Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter without regard to any agreement between the parties, its jurisdiction is not dependent on their consent and is not affected thereby,⁸² even though such agreement is illegal.⁸³

c. Jurisdiction of the Person

In the absence of contrary statute, a court having jurisdiction of the subject matter may, as a general rule, acquire jurisdiction over the persons of the parties by their consent.

It is well established, as a general rule, that where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter or cause of action, jurisdiction over the persons of the parties may be conferred by consent,⁸⁴ as where defendant has voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of the court.⁸⁵ Accordingly, express or implied consent of the parties to the jurisdiction of the court may operate to cure defects of jurisdiction arising from irregularities in the commencement of the proceedings, defective process, or even the absence of process.⁸⁶ Further, it has been held that the court may exercise jurisdiction over a party submitting thereto even though it has no jurisdiction of the subject matter, where under statute it has power over the case to permit amendment of pleadings or to order transfer to another court.⁸⁷ On the other hand, consent cannot give a court jurisdiction over a person not a resident within its territorial jurisdiction where a statute operates to make the defect one of subject matter.⁸⁸ Also, a party cannot consent to jurisdiction over his person so as to prejudice the rights of third persons.⁸⁹

Time of consent. While it has been intimated that the consent conferring jurisdiction may be given either before or after action has been brought,⁹⁰ the execution of a consent and waiver prior to the institution of a proceeding has been held not to confer jurisdiction over the party executing such consent and waiver;⁹¹ and a provision in a lease that the venue of a suit on such lease shall be in a certain county has been held not to give to the court of that county jurisdiction of a nonresident of the state.⁹²

E. SCOPE AND EXTENT OF JURISDICTION

§ 86. In General

Courts cannot transcend the powers granted to them by law. Generally they have power to control their own proceedings, and to perform any act which a judge may perform, unless his power to act is made exclusive.

A court cannot transcend the powers granted to it by law,⁹³ although it may have jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter in an action,⁹⁴ and it can exercise its powers only in judicial proceedings.⁹⁵ A court has been broadly said to have authority to control all persons and things within its own territorial limits,⁹⁶ but when an asserted power is inconsistent with an established right the power must be denied.⁹⁷

A court has inherent power to maintain its jurisdiction and render it effective in behalf of litigants.⁹⁸ Generally speaking, courts have the pow-

Jurisdiction of a cause includes the power to define the right sought to be protected,³ and the power to render any rightful judgment in the cause;⁴ and jurisdiction given by statute over certain proceedings in a specified matter may be exercised even though the enforcement of the entire remedy is not necessary for the protection of plaintiff's legal rights.⁵

The limitation of jurisdiction is discussed in § 30 supra.

§ 88. Ancillary and Incidental Jurisdiction

A grant of jurisdiction implies the necessary and usual incidental powers essential to effectuate it, and every regularly constituted court has power to do all things reasonably necessary for the administration of justice within the scope of its jurisdiction, and for the enforcement of its judgments and mandates, even though the court may thus be called upon to decide matters which would not be within its cognizance as original causes of action.

While a court may be expressly granted the incidental powers necessary to effectuate its jurisdiction,¹³ a grant of jurisdiction, in the absence of prohibitive legislation,¹⁴ implies the necessary and usual incidental powers essential to effectuate it,¹⁵ and, subject to existing laws and constitutional provisions,¹⁶ every regularly constituted court has power to do all things that are reasonably necessary for the administration of justice within the scope of its jurisdiction,¹⁷ and for the enforcement of its

Giving effect to "all rights"

Under a statute requiring that all rights, both legal and equitable, be given effect, and that the court apply legal and equitable remedies, "such as the nature of the case may allow or require," the court's power to give effect to all rights is restricted to instances when the nature of the case may allow or require it.—Rogers v. However, these principles do not justify the assumption of equitable jurisdiction by a court which is not endowed with it.²² If a court has no jurisdiction of the principal question, it has none of its consequences and incidents;²³ and lack of jurisdiction to grant the principal relief sought is not cured by jurisdiction to grant the incidental relief sought.²⁴

The ancillary or incidental jurisdiction of probate and like courts, and of appellate courts, is considered infra in §§ 304 and 313 respectively.

Character of jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court over the incidents of a litigation is of the same character as that over the principal subject matter,²⁵ and, where the jurisdiction of the subject

Power to investigate. While it has been held that in the absence of statutory authorization a court has no power to order an investigation to be made out of court for the purpose of discovering facts regarding matters pending before the court,³¹ it has been recognized that courts have inherent power to investigate charges of acts having a direct tendency to obstruct or prevent the administration of justice,³² or charges of misconduct on the part of their officers.³³

Cross complaint or counterclaim

(1) Where a court has jurisdiction of an original suit, a cross complaint or counterclaim is treated as ancillary, and the court will entertain the ancillary suit even though it could not have entertained it as an independent suit; but when jurisdiction is lacking over the primary suit, the defect cannot be cured by a counterclaim of which the court also lacks jurisdiction.—Goldstone v. (2) Jurisdiction of set-off or counterclaim for less than jurisdictional amount see supra § 66.

F. EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION

§ 89. Mode of Exercise in General

In the absence of special statutory directions as to the mode of exercise of jurisdiction, it may be exercised according to the rules of common law, or in the mode prescribed by the court, exercising sound discretion or conforming to the spirit of the constitution or code. The attainment of justice is the courts' fundamental aim.

The jurisdiction of a court must be exercised in the mode prescribed by the law of the land.³⁶ The legislature has the power to regulate the manner or to fix the conditions under which the jurisdiction may be exercised,³⁷ even though the constitution gives a court exclusive jurisdiction in certain cases.³⁸

The protective features of statutes expressly prescribing the mode in which jurisdiction may be exercised must be substantially complied with;³⁹ but in the absence of special statutory directions as to the mode of exercise, jurisdiction may be exercised according to the rules of the common law,⁴⁰ or informally,⁴¹ or in the mode prescribed by the court, exercising sound discretion,⁴² or conforming to the spirit of the constitution or code.⁴³

The making of rules of practice and procedure is discussed in §§ 170-180 infra.

The attainment of justice is the fundamental aim of the courts;⁴⁴ in the absence of statutory inhibition, they may take such steps, regarding matters properly before them, as will promote the administration of justice,⁴⁵ and in exercising jurisdiction they should not permit irrelevant and immaterial matters to obstruct, delay, or defeat its administration.⁴⁶

Statutory jurisdiction. Special statutory jurisdiction can be exercised only as the statute directs.⁴⁷ However, unless a contrary intention clearly appears in the statute conferring jurisdiction, where jurisdiction over a new subject is conferred on a court of general jurisdiction the jurisdiction conferred is to be exercised by it as such a court, with the powers incident to its general jurisdiction so far as applicable to the new subject, and not as a tribunal of inferior jurisdiction created by statute, or by its justices as commissioners appointed by the

§ 90. Discretion of Court

As a general rule, the courts must exercise, in matters properly before them, the jurisdiction conferred upon them; but jurisdiction may be refused where there are good reasons against assuming it, as where reasons of public policy are opposed, or the court is not in a position to do complete justice.

As a general rule, the courts must exercise, in matters properly before them, the jurisdiction which has been conferred upon them.⁵⁰ However, jurisdiction need not necessarily be exercised in all cases where the right to exercise it exists.⁵¹

Where it is within the discretion of a particular court whether it will take jurisdiction of a cause, the question is one of fact to be determined by such court,⁵² and jurisdiction may be assumed or retained when no valid reason for refusing it is shown,⁵³ especially where there are also good reasons for its assumption or retention.⁵⁴ On the other hand, jurisdiction may be refused in the absence of sufficient reasons for assuming it.⁵⁵ A court which is not in a condition or position to do complete justice in the case may and should decline to entertain jurisdiction.⁵⁶ Jurisdiction may also be refused where there are reasons of public policy against entertaining the action;⁵⁷ where the assumption of jurisdiction would result in aiding a fraud;⁵⁸ where, as appears in § 77 supra, the action is between nonresidents, or where it is between a resident, subrogated to the rights of a nonresident, and a nonresident;⁵⁹ where the matter arises in another state whose courts have ample power to deal therewith;⁶⁰ where the suit is against a foreign corporation or its stockholders,⁶¹ or in favor of such stockholders;⁶² where there is an objection to the jurisdiction in a cause before a supreme court by stipulation, although the court might otherwise proceed;⁶³ where it is foreseen with certainty that the petitioner will not be aided;⁶⁴ or where the same questions are before another tribunal, and the court's decision of these questions would be nugatory,⁶⁵ although the fact that the same questions of law have arisen in a case pending in the supreme court of the United States will not cause a state court to decline to act or to delay its decision of a similar case until the supreme court has made its decision.⁶⁶ A court should not refrain from exercising its power merely because of fear that the power may be misused in other instances,⁶⁷ or because it is not foreseen with certainty that the outcome will help plaintiff.⁶⁸

Convenience has been said not to be a consideration in any case when the performance of a mandatory judicial function is involved;⁶⁹ and the principle of forum non conveniens is to be applied with caution.⁷⁰ The mere fact that the convenience of the parties will best be served by relegating them to another tribunal does not preclude assumption or retention of jurisdiction;⁷¹ and it has been held that a court cannot refuse jurisdiction because rights might be more conveniently and completely determined in another forum;⁷² but a law court may refuse to exercise its equitable powers where relief in equity would be more convenient and effectual.⁷³

Discretion not arbitrary. It has been declared that when a court is given discretion in the exercise of a power, a judicial, and not an arbitrary or even a moral, discretion is implied.⁷⁴

Nonjudicial authority. A court may refuse to exercise nonjudicial authority, such as to appoint a health commissioner, conferred upon it by statute.⁷⁵

§ 91. Territorial Limits

Courts of a state are restricted in the exercise of their authority to the limits of the state; and a court created within and for a particular territory within the state is limited in its jurisdiction to such territory.

Courts derive their authority from the sovereign power of the state, and are restricted in its exercise to the circumscribed limits of the state,⁷⁶ and beyond such limits their writs and processes, or attempts to exercise authority generally, are without force.⁷⁷ In the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision for extraterritorial jurisdiction,⁷⁸ a court created within and for a particular territory within the state is limited in its jurisdiction to such territory.⁷⁹

Courts cannot by their judgments or mandates affect property outside their territorial jurisdiction;⁸⁰ but a person whose domicile is within the court's jurisdiction may bring suit to recover the proceeds of foreign land;⁸¹ and where an assignee having proceeds of land both within and without the state is within the jurisdiction of the court, it may direct a distribution of the foreign fund.⁸²

The effect, if any, of original process outside the territorial jurisdiction of the court is considered in § 83 supra, and the jurisdiction of probate and like courts over property outside their territorial jurisdiction in § 303 infra. The territorial limits within which courts of equity may exercise their jurisdiction, and their powers over property outside their territorial jurisdiction, including, among other things, their jurisdiction of suits to compel, cancel, or reform a conveyance, or to enforce or rescind a sales contract, covering land outside their territorial jurisdiction, are considered in the C.J.S. title Equity §§ 79-83, also 15 C.J. p 818 note 71-p 820 note 2, p 820 note 7-p 821 note 22, and 21 C.J. p 149 note 44-p 153 note 93.

Effect of matters of venue. Statutes relating to venue, which has been distinguished from jurisdiction supra § 15, serve merely to fix the proper place of trial within the state of a cause of action there arising, and do not affect the jurisdiction of the court.⁸³

Where the circuit court of a judicial circuit, and not that of the county, is made the constitutional entity, the assumption of jurisdiction by the circuit court of one county of a cause whose proper venue is in another county of the same circuit is an irregularity, but not without jurisdiction.⁸⁴

G. LOSS OR DIVESTITURE OF JURISDICTION

§ 92. In General

Jurisdiction of a court when once conferred may be taken away only by express words, or by necessary implication from the terms, of the statute relied on to withdraw jurisdiction.

Where jurisdiction is conferred in all cases, some special or particular law is necessary to exclude it in any particular case.⁸⁵ While jurisdiction may be divested by a repeal of the statute which conferred jurisdiction,⁸⁶ in general jurisdiction once conferred is taken away only by express negative words or by irresistible implication from the terms of the statute;⁸⁷ but legislation conferring exclusive jurisdiction in certain cases on one court will by implication oust the jurisdiction of another court, which theretofore had concurrent jurisdiction in such cases.⁸⁸

Questions as to proceedings after decision that no jurisdiction exists are considered infra § 118, and as to reacquisition of jurisdiction by consent of parties after divestiture supra § 85. Questions as to the loss or divestiture of jurisdiction of federal courts are considered in the C.J.S. title Federal Courts § 26, also 25 C.J. p 717 note 7—p 718 note 21; of justices of the peace in civil proceedings, in the C.J.S. title Justices of the Peace § 43, also 35 C. J. p 538 note 89—p 541 note 40; and of courts in criminal prosecutions, in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law §§ 165–172, also 16 C.J. p 181 note 71—p 183 note 94.

Defective pleading. Where the court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and parties, its jurisdiction is not defeated because the declaration or bill is insufficient.⁸⁹ Questions as to the effect of pleadings in respect of the right to assume jurisdiction are considered supra § 33.

Agreement or consent. Parties may not by consent deprive a court of jurisdiction which is conferred on it by statute.⁹⁰ A contractual provision for submission to the jurisdiction of foreign courts does not necessarily prevent an action in the court of the state having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter.⁹¹

Limitation as to time. Jurisdiction conferred for a limited period of time will not continue in force after the expiration of such period,⁹² nor will any power exist thereafter to review or modify a judgment pronounced prior thereto.⁹³

§ 93. Events Happening after Jurisdiction Acquired

In general jurisdiction once acquired is not lost or divested by subsequent events.

As a general rule, jurisdiction once acquired is not defeated by subsequent events,⁹⁴ even though they

Contract made in state

In an action against a foreign corporation on breach of a contract between the parties reciting that while it was signed in the city of New York it should be considered and held to be a contract duly executed in England, on motion to vacate a summons, it was held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1780 subd 1, applied and that the New York supreme court had jurisdiction, the contract being one made in New York; the court should not permit the parties to deprive it of jurisdiction.—Stagg v. British Controlled Oilfields, 192 N.Y.S. 596, 117 Misc. 474.

are of such a character as would have prevented jurisdiction from attaching in the first instance.⁹⁵ So, where jurisdiction of the person or of the res has once attached, it is not defeated by a removal of the person or the res beyond the jurisdiction of the court.⁹⁶ In order, however, that the rule that jurisdiction continues notwithstanding the subsequent event is such as would have prevented the acquisition of jurisdiction in the first instance may apply, there must be an action pending over which the jurisdiction of the court has actually vested;⁹⁷ and, although a court has assumed jurisdiction of a case, it may be shown that the facts existing at the time that jurisdiction was assumed were such that the case was not within the jurisdiction of the court, and under such circumstances it is of course improper for the

(1) Stipulation for taking testimony before any judge and in any county, within judicial district.—Gotsch v. Schoenjahn, 207 N.W. 567, 201 Iowa 1317.

(2) Attempted withdrawal of petition and claim to estate in administration proceeding, without notice or approval of court and without withdrawal of appearance.—O'Connor v. Stanley, C.C.A.Neb., 54 F.2d 20.

(3) Fact that good defense could have been presented.—Hidden v. Edwards, 285 S.W. 462, 313 Mo. 642.

(4) Filing cross complaint alleging cause of action not within jurisdiction.—Johnson v. Greenen, 188 N. E. 796, 98 Ind.App. 612.

(5) Fact that attorney general was erroneously made a party.—Wemme v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Portland, 237 P. 674, 115 Or. 281.

(6) Failure of plaintiff to establish all that he claimed.—Silverman v. Greenberg, Cal., 83 P.2d 293.

(7) Giving false testimony on material matter.—In re Hannerkam's Estate, 77 P.2d 814, 51 Ariz. 447.

(8) Failure of party to disclose an important fact.—In re Hannerkam's Estate, supra.

New action on same cause

Court, in absence of final disposition of pending cause, has jurisdiction over defendant therein, notwithstanding new suit has been filed based on same cause of action.—Whitaker v. Wright, 129 So. 889, 100 Fla. 282.

Suit to cancel mortgage

The foreclosure of a mortgage does not divest jurisdiction of an action to cancel the mortgage.—Morrisson v. Chambers, 108 So. 666, 212

Ala. 574—Fair v. Cummings, 72 So. 389, 197 Ala. 389.

Failure of public officer to comply with duty

City solicitor's failure to discharge his duties regarding illegal expenditures by board of education, resulting in adverse judgment, did not destroy court's jurisdiction.—Lynch v. Board of Education of City School Dist. of City of Lakewood, 156 N.E. 188, 116 Ohio St. 361.

Payment

Alleged payment of note declared on in plaintiff's complaint did not deprive court of jurisdiction of the action and of defendants' complaint in set-off, where such payment did not include plaintiff's costs already accrued.—George A. Fernald & Co. v. Manley, 138 A. 247, 99 Vt. 421.

Transfer of property involved in suit

Wife made defendant in suit to impress trust on property transferred to her in fraud of husband's creditors was not entitled to transfer funds to attorney as fees so as to defeat court's jurisdiction over the property.—Schmitt v. Lamb, C.C.A. Miss., 48 F.2d 533, reversing, D.C., 43 F.2d 770, and certiorari granted Lamb v. Schmitt, 52 S.Ct. 43, 284 U. S. 609, 76 L.Ed. 521, affirmed 52 S.Ct. 317, 285 U.S. 222, 76 L.Ed. 720.

Lapse of time or delay

(1) While a court will not permit a case to lie dormant indefinitely, with the consent of everybody, and then allow it to be used by one party against the objection of the other as a basis for exercising power that would not otherwise exist, mere unexplained inaction for a year and a half does not ipso facto destroy the power of the court to proceed when both parties consent, and, where, after the court had decided to appoint a receiver for a street railroad company, a plan was agreed to by the parties for the operation of the property under direction of the court, which was in effect a substitute for the receivership, which plan was carried out for a number of years, the court did not during such time lose jurisdiction of the case.—City of Toledo v. Toledo Rys. & Light Co., Ohio, 259 F. 450, 170 C.C.A. 426.

(2) Mere passage of time was not sufficient to deprive court of jurisdiction over subject matter of its original decree granting perpetual injunction.—U. S. v. Aluminum Co. of America, D.C.Pa., 19 F.Supp. 374. Effect of transfer of cause from one state court to another see infra §§ 517-520.

Appointment as consul

Jurisdiction of state court properly acquired was not divested by subsequent appointment of defendant as vice consul of a foreign country, notwithstanding U.S.Judicial Code § 256, 28 U.S.C.A. § 371, vests in federal courts exclusive jurisdiction of actions against vice consuls.—Earle v. Plaintiff's departure from state Jurisdiction of district court was not lost by plaintiff's departure from state.—Bolich v. Robinson, 184 N.W. 218, 106 Neb. 449.

Leaving state and making no defense

Mechanic's lien defendant cannot destroy court's jurisdiction, which had attached to him, by leaving state and instructing his attorney to make no further defense.—Cruz v. Texas Glass & Paint Co., Tex.Civ.App., 199 S.W. 819, error refused.

97. U.S.—Thaxter v. Hatch, C.C. Ill., 23 F.Cas.No.13,866, 6 McLean 68.

court to proceed further.⁹⁸ While it has been stated broadly that jurisdiction once acquired by a statement in good faith of a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the court is not lost by the subsequent elimination of allegations of the complaint, which were essential to the existence of jurisdiction, by pleading, as in the case of an answer or demurrer, or by failure of proof, or in any other way,⁹⁹ there is authority for the view that plaintiff, after jurisdiction has attached, may so change his pleading voluntarily that the court will no longer have jurisdiction on the face of the pleading.¹

The general rule that jurisdiction is not defeated by subsequent events has been applied or recognized in respect of an agreement between the parties,² the nonexistence of a lien,³ amendments of pleadings,⁴ errors or irregularities in the exercise of jurisdiction,⁵ and adjournments and continuances.⁶ Questions as to the dependence of jurisdiction on correctness of determination are considered supra §§ 27, 35.

Where a suit is voluntarily settled before judgment, the court does not wholly lose jurisdiction, so that no disposition of the case can be made, but should enter judgment dismissing both complaint and counterclaim.⁷ The court is not deprived of jurisdiction to proceed with the cause by virtue of an agreement between the parties for dismissal if defendant should make certain payments, where defendant fails to comply with the condition as to payments.⁸

A statute which expressly withdraws the power to do an act after the expiration of a fixed period has been regarded as mandatory so as to prevent the exercise of jurisdiction in that regard after such period has passed.⁹ Under some statutes the jurisdiction of some courts over certain types of actions is taken away where the population of the county decreases to less than a specified number.¹⁰

Jurisdiction of personal action

(1) In action to recover money judgment and to foreclose lien, jurisdiction is not necessarily lost by showing or adjudication that lien does not exist.—Southwest Inv. Co. v. Terry, Tex.Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 1051, error refused—15 C.J. p 824 note 68 [b] (2).

(2) Jurisdiction of district court shown by petition for debt and to foreclose lien on land attached in absence of pleading or proof that allegations of lien were fraudulently made to confer jurisdiction, and was not defeated by defense that property was a homestead, which, if sustained, would defeat lien.—Massie v. City of Fort Worth, Tex.Civ.App., 262 S.W. 837.

(3) Where court acquired jurisdiction by reason of the existence of a lien when the suit was commenced, the expiration of the lien during the pendency of the suit did not divest the court of jurisdiction so as to prevent the rendition of a personal judgment.—Darrow v. Morgan, 65 N.Y. 333.

Impaneling or drawing jury

Illegality or error respecting drawing or impaneling of jury is not jurisdictional, but at most error in the exercise of jurisdiction, and does not deprive court of jurisdiction.—Livesey v. Stock, 281 P. 70, 208 Cal. 315.—Amos v. Superior Court of California, in and for San Diego County, 239 P. 317, 196 Cal. 677.

Proof

Error or irregularity in respect of proof, or failure to hear proof, does not deprive court of jurisdiction.—Stephenson v. Kirtley, W.Va., 46 S.Ct. 50, 269 U.S. 163, 70 L.Ed. 213.

Procedure

When, by statute, a matter is referred to court having general jurisdiction, legislative intent to deprive court of jurisdiction because of failure to act in particular way ought to be very clear from language used.—State v. Town of Hessville, 132 N.E. 588, 191 Ind. 251, denying rehearing 131 N.E. 46, 191 Ind. 251.

15 C.J. p 823 note 67 [a] (7)–(10).

Repeated continuances create no presumption that the court lost jurisdiction.—Cahill Swift Mfg. Co. v. Hayes, 157 P. 1169, 98 Kan. 269, denying rehearing 156 P. 735, 97 Kan. 740.

8. Repossession of property by defendant

The rule stated in the text was applied where plaintiff sued for the balance of the purchase price of an automobile and claimed a purchase-money lien, and, pursuant to the agreement between the parties, the automobile was redelivered to defendant by the sheriff who had taken possession under a writ of seizure.—Walker v. Robinson, 112 So. 867, 147 Miss. 67.

9. Cal.—Donner v. Superior Court within and for Los Angeles County, 255 P. 272, 82 Cal.App. 165.

10. Saving clause

The provision in Code § 2119, that jurisdiction once having been acquired shall not thereafter be affected by any question of population, does not refer to the general jurisdiction of the court involved but to particular actions where the population should decrease below the specified number while such actions were pending.—Kimball Independent Consol. School Dist. No. 2 v. Willow Lake School Dist., 209 N.W. 650, 50 S.D. 279.

Questions as to loss, divestiture, or defeat of jurisdiction dependent on the amount involved, by reason of proof, or amendment of pleadings, as to amount of claim are considered supra §§ 54-69.

Delay, adjournments, and continuances in inferior courts. An inferior court may lose jurisdiction by failure to render judgment within the time limited therefor by statute,¹¹ or by an unauthorized adjournment.¹² Under the practice in some jurisdictions, however, jurisdiction is not lost by an adjournment to a time beyond the period fixed by a statutory limitation where the adjournment is granted on the application of defendant, or with the consent of the parties; nor is jurisdiction lost by an adjournment, otherwise valid, where it is necessitated by the fact that the court is actually engaged in the trial of another case; nor is it lost where the case is duly continued indefinitely by agreement of the parties and is tried on a day fixed by the court pursuant to such agreement.¹³

Division of county or change of county lines. Where suit is properly commenced in one county, the subsequent division of that county or a change of county lines will not necessarily divest the jurisdiction.¹⁴

Death of party. Whether jurisdiction is divested or not by the death of a party depends primarily on the nature of the action and the governing statute and also on the nature of the jurisdiction with which the court is invested.¹⁵ The court does not necessarily lose jurisdiction by the death of some of the petitioners,¹⁶ and a statute may authorize continuation of the action,¹⁷ as by the substitution of a representative of the decedent.¹⁸

Questions as to the abatement or survival of actions on the death of parties are considered in detail in the C.J.S. title Abatement and Revival §§ 114-186.

Conditional jurisdiction. A conditional jurisdiction is sometimes acquired by the granting of a provisional remedy as shown supra § 80, which jurisdiction is subject to be divested by failure to do certain acts within a specified time.¹⁹

Stipulation extending time

(1) A justice of the municipal court of the city of New York did not lose jurisdiction by failing to comply with the requirement of the Consolidation Act, L.1882 c 410 § 1384, that he shall render judgment within eight days from submission of the case to him, where counsel by written stipulation had extended the time.—Mayer v. Friedman, 60 N.Y.S. 969, 44 App.Div. 518.

(2) But it was held that, where on Febr. 8, 1899, the time within which a municipal court justice should decide a pending cause was extended to Nov. 24, 1899, and he made no order as required by the Consolidation Act § 1372, and failed to decide the same, the municipal court lost jurisdiction of the case on the expiration of the time as extended, and hence another justice had no power to hear the same.—Lamura v. Haggerty, 62 N.Y.S. 1084, 30 Misc. 745.

12. N.Y.—Berliner v. M. Zimmerman Co., 104 N.Y.S. 407, 54 Misc. 245.

15 C.J. p 825 note 75.

Definite adjournment

In the district courts there must be a definite adjournment or the court loses jurisdiction, except that, after hearing, the court may reserve its decision, which amounts to its judgment, for a reasonable time.—

Morley v. McDonald, 118 A. 582, 98 N.J.Law 275.

Want of due adjournment

Under L.1921 c 244 § 24, unless case pending before municipal court of Fond du Lac County regulated thereby is adjourned to an hour, day, and place certain, and due entries made thereof, court loses jurisdiction, and where court closed its docket and adjourned without adjourning case it lost jurisdiction.—Sippel v. Fond du Lac County, 200 N. W. 459, 184 Wis. 607.

15 C.J. p 825 note 78.

Several defendants

Resident defendant's death, leaving nonresident sole defendant, before second trial of tort action did not deprive court of county of decedent's residence of jurisdiction, in view of provision of Code 1932 § 422 that, if there be more than one defendant, the action may be tried "in any county in which one or more of the defendants . . . resides at the time of the commencement of the action."—Halsey v. Minnesota-South Carolina Land & Timber Co., 166 S. E. 626, 168 S.C. 18.

Several defendants

Where a court of equity, by reason of the residence of one of several codefendants living in different counties, has obtained jurisdiction, such jurisdiction is not lost by the death of the resident defendant.—Lofton v. Collins, 43 S.E. 708, 117 Ga. 434, 61 L.R.A. 150.

Insolvent estate

Where before the administrator appeared or made default, the probate estate of decedent defendant was adjudged insolvent by the probate judge, the common pleas did not thereafter have jurisdiction to determine the merits of the action, nor to order any disposition of it except its discontinuance.—Parker v. Badger, 26 N.H. 466.

Nonresidence of personal representative of party

Where a party dies after the jurisdiction of the court has attached, and his personal representative is substituted, the jurisdiction of the court is not affected by the nonresidence of the personal representative. U.S.—Clarke v. Mathewson, R.I., 12 Pet. 164, 9 L.Ed. 1041.

§ 94. Final Disposition of Cause

In general, a court retains jurisdiction of a cause until final disposition, but jurisdiction ceases with rendition of final judgment or decree except as to certain matters.

A court, having obtained jurisdiction, retains it until the final disposition of the cause;²⁰ but after final judgment or decree has been rendered and the parties dismissed, in general, the jurisdiction of the court is exhausted, and it cannot take any further proceedings in the case,²¹ at least where the judgment term has ended,²² except with respect to the District Court of Second Judicial Dist. in and for City and County of Denver, 299 P. 5, 89 Colo. 88.

Determination of all issues

The jurisdiction of a court over subject matter and parties, once fully attached in a cause, continues until all issues both of fact and of law have been finally determined.

Tex.—Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Muse, 207 S.W. 897, 109 Tex. 352, 4 A.L.R. 613.

Dismissal of resident defendant

It was held, under the statute involved, that dismissal of suit against the only resident defendant did not divest jurisdiction in respect of defendants residing in a county other than that in which the action was brought.—Read v. Renaud, 14 Miss. 79.

Entry of judgment

(1) Where a tribunal has jurisdiction over parties and subject matter, the jurisdiction continues until final judgment shall have been entered.—Kennedy v. Industrial Accident Commission of California, 195 P. 267, 50 Cal.App. 184.

(2) Ordinarily, trial court has full control over trial of cause up to time of entry of judgment, and after judgment where motion for new trial is timely made, and even later under some circumstances and within limited time.—Wasatch Oil Refining Co. v. Wade, 63 P.2d 1070, 92 Utah 50.

(3) When the district court acquires jurisdiction of an action, it retains it for the purpose of the entry of any judgment that may be proper under the pleadings and the evidence.—Bolich v. Robinson, 184 N.W. 218, 106 Neb. 449.

Finality of order

Where order for distribution in partition proceeding, properly construed, was final only in so far as it concerned master in chancery who made the report which the order approved, court did not lose jurisdiction to enter subsequent orders.—Masters v. Masters, 249 Ill.App. 259.

Where judge has jurisdiction to hear a matter and the matter is heard before him, he entertains jurisdiction until his decision is rendered.—First Carolinas Joint Stock Land Bank of Columbia v. Knotts, S.C., 1 S.E.2d 797.

Dismissal with prejudice

In suit to cancel deed, declare trust in personality and for money judgment, trial court was without jurisdiction to exercise jurisdiction over land by granting injunctive relief on defendants' application after entry of judgment dismissing action as to land, with prejudice, following which defendants' tenant abandoned premises and plaintiffs took possession.—Thompson v. Thompson, 86 P.2d 286, 184 Okl. 208.

Resident defendants

(1) Under the practice in some jurisdictions, jurisdiction over defendant not resident of county in which action was brought, and summoned out of county, is lost after rendition of judgment in favor of local defendant.—Ramey v. Weddington, 105 S.W.2d 824, 268 Ky. 675—University of Louisville v. Metcalfe, 287 S.W. 945, 216 Ky. 339, 49 A.L.R. 375.

(2) A like rule applies where the action is dismissed as to resident defendants.—Dees' Adm'r v. Dees' Ex'r, 61 S.W.2d 301, 249 Ky. 650.

Order for incorporation of municipality

Circuit court for a certain county, having jurisdiction of a proceeding looking to the incorporation of a village, could not, after entry of an order of incorporation, entertain a proceeding to determine, on an order to show cause, the right of the assessor of another county to levy an assessment for income taxes against residents of said village.—In re Village of Chenequa, 222 N.W. 794, 197 Wis. 591.

Adjournment sine die

Where a trial judge adjourns court sine die, he loses jurisdiction of case finally determined during that term except under special circumstances.—Burns v. Babb, 3 S.E.2d 247, 190 S.C. 508—Bagerton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 178 S.E. 844, 175 S.C. 209.

entry of the judgment or decree,²³ or, in a proper case, its enforcement,²⁴ correction,²⁵ or vacation.²⁶

The rendition of an erroneous judgment which has been vacated after the ascertainment of errors does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to render a proper judgment.²⁷

§ 95. Repeal or Amendment of Statute

Jurisdiction over pending cases may be ousted by the valid repeal of the statute on which jurisdiction wholly depends.

While, according to some cases, a court is not necessarily deprived of jurisdiction of pending actions, by the enactment of a statutory provision which gives exclusive jurisdiction of actions of the type involved to another court, even in the absence of a saving clause,²⁸ it has been held or recognized that jurisdiction over pending causes will be ousted by the valid repeal of the statute on which it wholly depends,²⁹ unless the repealing act contains a clause saving pending actions from the operation of the repeal³⁰ or a substantial reenactment of the provisions under which the action was brought.³¹ This rule does not apply, however, to exclusively constitutional courts,³² and an invalid statute which attempts to oust the jurisdiction of a court over pending actions is ineffective.³³

It has been held that, where a court originally obtains and exercises jurisdiction, jurisdiction will not be overturned and impaired by any legislative enactment unless express prohibitory words are used,³⁴ and that jurisdiction duly acquired under an existing statute is not taken away by a subsequent statute prescribing a different method of commencing an action.³⁵

Bringing forward and restoring to docket

Where a valid and final judgment has been entered and the parties are out of court, the court may not, at a subsequent term, bring the action forward nor restore it to the docket, especially where the rights of third persons are involved.—Davis v. Cass, 142 A. 377, 127 Me. 167.

Courts of equity

Circuit courts, in exercise of equity jurisdiction, have no terms in the sense that their jurisdiction is lost, except as to final decrees, as provided in Code 1928 § 6670.—Ex parte King, 162 So. 275, 230 Ala. 529.

Jurisdiction over case distinguished from jurisdiction over records

In a case in which was involved the question as to the authority to have entered on the minutes an order made at a former term which was inadvertently, or otherwise, omitted, it was recognized that the court may lose jurisdiction of the case to which a record refers, although not losing jurisdiction of its records.—*Hannon v. Saving clause in general statute

It has been held that a saving clause as to pending actions, contained in a general statute, must be read into a statute repealing a prior statutory provision conferring jurisdiction of certain actions on a particular court, so that the court retained jurisdiction of an action which was commenced intermediate the date of enactment of the repealing statute and the date said statute was to become operative and which was pending on the latter date.—Kelley v. State, 114 N.E. 255, 94 Ohio St. 331.

Action begun on day statute passed

H. PRESUMPTIONS AS TO JURISDICTION

§ 96. Courts of General Jurisdiction

- a. In general
- b. Presumptions as affected by territorial limits of jurisdiction
- c. Exercise of special statutory powers
- d. Conclusiveness of presumption

a. In General

It is generally presumed, unless the contrary appears, as by the record, that a court of general jurisdiction has jurisdiction of a cause, that all the facts necessary in order for it to render a particular judgment existed and were duly found, and that every step necessary to give it jurisdiction was taken.

36. Mont.—Bury v. Bury, 223 P. 502, 69 Mont. 570.
N.C.—Downing v. White, 188 S.E. 815, 211 N.C. 40.

Court of record

(1) "It is presumed that . . . [the] jurisdiction [of a court of record] was properly acquired."—People ex rel. Kammerer v. Brophy, 7 N.Y. S.2d 34, 255 App.Div. 821, affirmed 20 N.E.2d 1006—People ex rel. Price v. Hayes, 136 N.Y.S. 854, 858, 151 App.Div. 561.

(2) Generally, court of record is presumed to have all the incidents pertaining thereto at common law, including the power to entertain a motion for a new trial, except as expressly denied by act creating court.—Malinowski v. Moss, 220 N.W. 197, 196 Wis. 292.

Jurisdiction to enter judgment

There is a presumption that a court in entering a judgment had jurisdiction to do so.—Jotter v. Charles B. Marvin Inv. Co., 189 P. 22, 67 Colo. 555.

Discretion to hear and rule

"The performance of a judicial act necessarily implies a court with both jurisdiction and discretion to hear and rule."—Graham v. Floyd, 197 S.E. 873, 877, 214 N.C. 77—Hardy v. Turnage, 168 S.E. 823, 826, 204 N.C. 538.

Proceedings to organize school district

Jurisdiction of court in proceedings to organize school district will be presumed until properly challenged.—In re Common School Dist. in Highmore Independent School Dist. of Highmore, Hyde County, 222 N.W. 690, 54 S.D. 146.

In doubtful cases all intendments of plaintiff's pleading will be construed in favor of court's jurisdiction.—Worth Finance Co. v. Charlie Hillard Motor Co., Tex.Civ.App., 131 S.W.2d 416—Williams v. Kelley, Tex.Civ.App., 77 S.W.2d 263.

It has been stated, without reference to the nature of the jurisdiction of the court involved, that a prima facie presumption of jurisdiction arises from the exercise of it,³⁶ that jurisdiction over the subject matter and parties has been rightfully acquired and exercised,³⁷ and that the burden is on the party asserting want of jurisdiction to show such want.³⁸

More particularly, the presumption is that a court of general jurisdiction has jurisdiction of a cause, or has acted within its jurisdiction, unless the contrary is made to appear,³⁹ and every presumption

Presumptions as to jurisdiction:

In collateral attack on judgment see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 425, also 34 C.J. p 537 note 72—p 546 note 18.

Of federal courts see the C.J.S. title Federal Courts § 8, also 25 C.J. p 692 note 65—p 693 note 67.

"There is a presumption of legality attaching to the acts of a court of general jurisdiction."—In re Dugan, 76 P.2d 961, 962, 158 Or. 439.

Transferred case

Under statutes providing that judgments of district courts could transfer cases from one court to another and that any judge could try any case pending in another district court, there was held to be a presumption that a case was properly before the district court to which it was transferred, where the judgment recited that all parties appeared and announced ready for trial.—De Zavala v. Scanlan, Tex.Com.App., 65 S.W.2d 489, reversing Scanlan v. De Zavala, Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 849.

Suit enjoining enforcement of default judgment

There was held to be a presumption that suit to enjoin enforcement of default judgment regularly became subject to trial in district court other than where rendered, notwithstanding the provisions of a statute requiring that writs of injunction to stay an execution on a judgment should be tried in the court where the judgment was rendered, such statute being qualified by other statutes regulating the distribution and trial of cases in these courts.—Rasmussen v. Grimes, Tex.Com.App., 24 S.W.2d 346, affirming, Civ.App., 13 S.W.2d 959.

Invitation to hold court

The presumption includes the further presumption that a district judge from one district who holds court or disposes of judicial business in another district has acted on proper invitation under constitutional and statutory provisions permitting him to hold court in any county on the request of a judge thereof or the governor.—Kettenbach v. Walker, 186 P. 912, 32 Idaho 544.

California municipal court; superior court

(1) Municipal courts of California are to be regarded as courts of superior or general jurisdiction for the purpose of applying the presumption of jurisdiction.—Adolph M. Schwartz, Inc. v. Burnett Pharmacy, 295 P. 508, 112 Cal.App.Supp. 781.

(2) "The superior court [of California] as a court of general jurisnot inconsistent with the record is to be indulged in favor of such jurisdiction,⁴⁰ at least when the allegations of the petition show jurisdiction.⁴¹ So, it is well established that, where a court of general jurisdiction has exercised its powers, it will be presumed, unless the contrary appears, as by the record, that it had jurisdiction both of the subject matter of the action and of the parties,⁴² for, as the first duty of all courts is to keep strictly within the limits of their jurisdiction, any affirmative act on the part of a court implies that it has jurisdiction so to act,⁴³ and that it has ascertained that it had such jurisdiction.⁴⁴ Conversely, no presumption against jurisdiction should be indulged,⁴⁵ nor should anything be presumed to be outside of the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction.⁴⁶

Accordingly, unless the contrary appears from the record, it will be presumed, with respect to a court of general jurisdiction, that all the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction to render the particular judgment existed⁴⁷ and were duly found,⁴⁸ that the court has determined every matter on which its jurisdiction depends,⁴⁹ and that every step necessary to give it jurisdiction has been taken.⁵⁰ So, unless the contrary appears, it will be diction is presumed to have jurisdiction over a particular cause."—Peterson v. Donelley, 91 P.2d 123, 125, 33 Cal.App.2d 133.

(3) It is presumed to have jurisdiction of unlawful detainer action brought under statute by purchaser at trustee's sale, notwithstanding damages alleged amounted to but one thousand dollars, that rental value of premises was not alleged, and that by statute a justice's court would have jurisdiction if rental value was one hundred dollars or less.—Cheney v. Trauzettel, 69 P.2d 832, 9 Cal.2d 158.

(4) From the time of service of summons or the equivalent thereof, a presumption arose that jurisdiction of the superior court of California would continue until a final judgment was entered.—Merner Lumber Co. v. Silvey, Cal.App., 84 P.2d 1062.

Upon appeal from the denial of a motion for a new trial, it was held, as differing from the case of a collateral attack upon a judgment, that no presumptions are indulged in favor of court's jurisdiction over plaintiff to render judgment on defendants' cross-actions.—*Cornelius v. Lapse of time

Presumption acquires greater force after lapse of time.—Wilcox v. Cannon, 1 Coldw., Tenn., 369.

Admission of lack of jurisdiction

Jurisdiction will not be presumed, in a collateral proceeding, where there was in such proceeding a direct admission that jurisdiction did not exist.—Doe v. Anderson, 5 Ind. 33.

Notice of term not presumed

Although, in absence of any showing to contrary in record, existence of all matters necessary to confer jurisdiction will be presumed, where record showed that suit for divorce was filed and tried on opening day of special term, no presumption that statutory five-day notice of term was given to litigants would obtain.—*State ex rel. Application throughout proceedings

The rule applies to the various stages of the proceedings from institution to completion as well as to judgments or decrees.—Voorhees v. Jackson, Ohio, 10 Pet., U.S., 449, 9 L.Ed. 490.

presumed that the cause of action had accrued when suit was brought,⁵¹ that there was due service of process or notice, or appearance by the parties,⁵² and that an appearance by an attorney was authorized.⁵³ The presumption of jurisdiction exists, even though the record is silent on a matter necessary to jurisdiction.⁵⁴

Presumptions have been indulged that a corporation's residence and the location of land which was the subject of a suit were within the territorial limits of the court's jurisdiction.

A presumption has been indulged that a defendant corporation resided in the county in which suit was started, where residence there was necessary to the court's jurisdiction;⁵⁵ so also, it has been presumed that land which was the subject of a suit was situated within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the court.⁵⁶

c. Exercise of Special Statutory Powers

There is no presumption of the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction where it exercises special statutory powers in a special statutory manner or not according to the course of the common law.

Some authorities have applied the presumption of jurisdiction of courts of general jurisdiction in cases where such courts have exercised special statutory powers,⁵⁷ and it seems well established that the presumption arises where they exercise such spe-

Actual or constructive service

Presumption is the same whether service is actual or constructive.—McHatton v. Rhodes, 76 P. 1036, 143 Cal. 275, 101 Am.S.R. 125.

Defendant "duly served;" substituted service

(1) Where a judgment roll recites that "legal process . . . was duly served upon all . . . persons who had . . . any interest in said property who were in this state," and that other persons were served by publication, and where service by publication on defendant would not have warranted judgment against him, the recital that defendant was "duly served" means that he was "personally served," since he admittedly had an interest in the property and will be presumed to have been within the state; and such judgment is binding upon him, although naming him as "Kinney" instead of "Kenney."—Bank of Com- merce & Trust Co. v. Kenney, 165 P. 8, 9, 175 Cal. 59.

(2) Where a court of general jurisdiction is authorized to bring in, by substituted service, nonresident defendants interested in property within its jurisdiction, but is not required to put proof of service in the record, it will be presumed, where the court has ordered such service, that it was made as ordered, although no evidence thereof appears of record.—Applegate v. Lexington & Carter County Min. Co., Ky., 6 S.Ct. 742, 117 U.S. 255, 270, 29 L.Ed. 892.

Proof of want of service sought

Upon appeal in a suit to quiet title to land purchased by plaintiff at sheriff's sale in a partition action, the appellate court in examining the judgment in the partition action will not look for proof of personal service upon defendant in such action, but for want of such service.—Bank of Commerce & Trust Co. v. Kenney, 165 P. 8, 175 Cal. 59.

Notice of motion to increase ad damnum

Record of district court, reciting giving of leave to increase ad damnum on hearing of motion, carries with it presumption that notice of motion was given, so as to bestow jurisdiction.—Colagiovanni v. District Court of Sixth Judicial Dist., 133 A. 1, 47 R.I. 323.

Presumption not overcome

The presumption was held not overcome by a return of service by a sheriff of a different locality which stated that defendant's president was served at defendant's business office, where the recital as to defendant's office was surplusage.—St. Charles Sav. Bank v. Thompson & Gray Quarry Co., Mo., 210 S.W. 868.

Representation by agent in county

Where, at the time of the issuance of a benefit certificate sued on, a defendant association had a camp located in a particular county, and where plaintiff furnished papers concerning the death of insured to the clerk of the camp in that county, it could be inferred that the association had agents transacting business in such county, so as to give the circuit court of such county jurisdiction under the governing statute.—*Gill v. cial statutory powers by the usual common-law and chancery proceedings and practice;⁵⁸ likewise it arises where such courts enforce statutory causes of action of which they have cognizance in the exercise of their general jurisdiction over the subject matter of such actions, rather than in the exercise of the special jurisdiction conferred on them by statute.⁵⁹

On the other hand, it is very generally considered that there is no presumption of jurisdiction where a court of general jurisdiction exercises, in a special statutory manner, or otherwise than according to the course of the common law, special statutory powers not belonging to it as such court, and not within its ordinary jurisdiction,⁶⁰ since, under such circumstances, the court stands, with respect to the special power exercised, on the same footing with courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction.⁶¹

d. Conclusiveness of Presumption

The presumption of the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction is rebuttable; under most authorities it may be overcome only by recitals in the record affirmatively showing lack of jurisdiction.

The presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction, discussed in § 96 a supra, is not conclusive, but may be rebutted.⁶² The burden is on the party claiming want of jurisdiction to show such want;⁶³ and while there are authorities holding that lack of jurisdiction, at least over the subject matter,⁶⁴ may be shown by evidence dehors the record,⁶⁵ according to the weight of authority the presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of superior courts may be overcome only by recitals in the record showing affirmatively that the court was without jurisdiction.⁶⁶

§ 97. Courts of Inferior, Limited, or Special Jurisdiction

No presumption exists in favor of the jurisdiction of courts, or other tribunals, of inferior, limited, or special jurisdiction; but once jurisdiction is established the regularity of their proceedings and the validity of subsequent proceedings are presumed.

No presumption exists in favor of the jurisdiction of courts of inferior, limited, or special jurisdiction,⁶⁷ or in favor of the jurisdiction of inferior magistrates or tribunals exercising judicial functions,⁶⁸ and jurisdiction in such cases must affirmatively appear,⁶⁹ and the facts conferring jurisdiction affirmatively found to exist;⁷⁰ however, it is within the constitutional power of the legislature to change this rule.⁷¹ So the mere exercise of jurisdiction by such courts does not raise a presumption of the existence of the requisite jurisdictional facts,⁷² and one who relies on a decision or order of such a court, or who claims any right or benefit under its proceedings, must affirmatively show its jurisdiction by alleging and proving it;⁷³ and this rule applies to jurisdiction both of the person and of the subject matter.⁷⁴ Where, however, jurisdiction is once established, and these courts have not transcended their powers, the validity of subsequent proceedings will be presumed until the contrary is shown,⁷⁵ and the same presumptions of regularity will attend the proceedings as apply to the acts of courts of general jurisdiction.⁷⁶ Thus one who relies on a loss of jurisdiction to invalidate a judgment must affirmatively show such loss.⁷⁷

§ 98. Probate and Similar Courts

There is a presumption of the jurisdiction of probate and similar courts when they possess the attributes of courts of general jurisdiction, but not when they are held to have a special and limited jurisdiction.

The rules as to the presumptions in favor of the jurisdiction of courts of general jurisdiction, as set out in § 96 supra, apply to courts of probate, and those with like powers, where they are regarded as courts of general jurisdiction or as possessing the attributes thereof, or when they are adjudicating the class of questions over which they have general jurisdiction.⁷⁸ These presumptions may be applied even though the courts in question have not exclusive jurisdiction,⁷⁹ or have a limited, but not a special or inferior, jurisdiction,⁸⁰ or have powers which are limited to certain specified subjects.⁸¹

On the other hand, the rule against the presumption of jurisdiction in courts of inferior, limited, or special jurisdiction, as set out in § 97 supra, is applicable to probate and similar courts where their jurisdiction is held to be a special and limited one, not according to the common law,⁸² particularly when they exercise powers in special matters constituting exceptions to their general authority.⁸³

So the presumption of jurisdiction has been indulged with respect to a court by which a guardian was appointed,⁸⁴ but not, in another case, where the court was held to be, in such matters, one of special and limited jurisdiction.⁸⁵

§ 99. County Courts

There is a presumption of the jurisdiction of county courts where their jurisdiction is general or they are adjudicating classes of questions as to which they have general jurisdiction.

The presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of courts of general jurisdiction, as discussed in § 96, supra, applies to county courts where their jurisdiction is general,⁸⁶ or where they are courts of limited, but not of inferior, jurisdiction, adjudicating particular classes of questions as to which they have general jurisdiction;⁸⁷ and where jurisdiction of the subject matter has been acquired by such a court it is presumed to continue.⁸⁸ However, where a county court is regarded as an inferior court, acting under special statutory directions and not according to the course of the common law, no inferences in favor of its jurisdiction may be indulged.⁸⁹

§ 100. Courts of Another State

It is presumed, unless the contrary appears, that courts of record, or of general jurisdiction, of another state had the authority which they exercised; but no presumption of jurisdiction obtains when such courts have acted in matters as to which their jurisdiction is held a limited one.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is presumed that courts of record, or of general jurisdiction, of another state had the authority which they assumed to exercise in particular cases,⁹⁰ and the presumption must be overcome by clear and convincing⁹¹ proof;⁹² but such presumption is not conclusive and does not preclude a collateral inquiry into the question whether or not jurisdiction actually existed.⁹³

The presumptions generally applicable to courts of general jurisdiction do not apply where the foreign court is acting in a matter as to which it is considered a court of limited jurisdiction;⁹⁴ and it is not necessarily to be presumed, in the absence of any showing to that effect, that a court of another state is a court of general jurisdiction whose jurisdiction is to be presumed.⁹⁵

I. RECORD RECITALS AS TO JURISDICTION

§ 101. Courts of General Jurisdiction

Jurisdictional facts expressly found by a superior court of general jurisdiction, or otherwise appearing of record, are conclusively established, unless irreconcilable with other parts of the record or, under some authorities, jurisdiction assumed to be exercised in a particular case falling within that class is, in a collateral proceeding, presumed. All matters necessary to give the court jurisdiction, upon which the record is silent, are presumed.—Foot v. Chittenden, 184 N.W. 167, 168, 106 Neb. 704.

"The county court is a court of general probate jurisdiction, and it should not be held to have acted in excess of its jurisdiction, unless it clearly appears that it entered a decree not authorized by law."—Hunter v. Wittier, 250 P. 793, 794, 120 Okl. 103.

Alleging cause of action within jurisdiction

As to matters over which a county court has general jurisdiction, if petition shows facts sufficient to show cause of action within such jurisdiction, and facts on face of record do not establish lack of jurisdiction, all presumptions are made in favor of power of court to act.—Brandeen v. Lou, 201 N.W. 665, 113 Neb. 34. Appointment of guardian see supra § 98.

Insanity proceedings

It will be presumed that a county court having general jurisdiction in insanity proceedings had jurisdiction both of the person and of the subject matter therein.—Moats v. Moore, 199 Ill.App. 270.

Missouri county courts

While early cases in Missouri held that the facts necessary to show jurisdiction of county courts must appear from their records, these cases were expressly overruled by Johnson v. Beazley, 65 Mo. 250, 27 Am.R. 276, and the principle announced that as to matters exclusively within their jurisdiction the same presumptions are to be indulged in favor of their proceedings, judgments and orders as are indulged with respect to a court of general jurisdiction.—Ussery v. Haynes, Mo., 127 S.W.2d 410.

A court of another state having jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties is presumed to have jurisdiction to determine the remedy.—Rubin v. Dale, 288 P. 223, 156 Wash. 676.

Service by publication

Presumption in favor of jurisdiction is the same where service made by publication as where it was personal.—In re Wiechers' Estate, 250 P. 397, 199 Cal. 523, certiorari denied Wiechers v. Wiechers, 47 S.Ct. 476, 273 U.S. 762, 71 L.Ed. 879.

with evidence aliunde; conversely, where it appears from the record that the court was without jurisdiction, no presumption in favor of jurisdiction can be indulged.

Jurisdictional facts expressly found by a superior court of general jurisdiction, or otherwise appearing of record, and relating to matter within the general scope of the courts' powers, are conclusively established thereby, and cannot be questioned in a collateral proceeding,⁹⁶ even though all facts essential to jurisdiction are not disclosed by the record,⁹⁷ unless the recitals as to jurisdiction are irreconcilable with the other facts disclosed by the record, in which case the record impeaches itself,⁹⁸ or, under some authorities, unless impeached by evidence aliunde.⁹⁹

Conversely, where it appears from the record that the court was without jurisdiction, no presumption in favor of jurisdiction can be indulged, and the action of the court is void.¹ When the record states the evidence or makes an averment showing a want of jurisdiction, it will not be presumed in support of the judgment that there was other or different evidence respecting the fact, or that the fact was otherwise than averred,² and if the record on the whole shows that what was done to acquire jurisdiction was insufficient, it will not be presumed that some other thing, not shown by the record, which would confer jurisdiction was done,³ the whole record being taken together for this purpose.⁴ Court records generally are considered in §§ 225-237 infra; the effect given to record recitals of jurisdiction upon appeal is considered in Appeal and Error § 1536 c, the effect given to recitals of jurisdiction in judgments on collateral attack generally in the C.J.S. title Judgments § 426, also 34 C.J. p 547 note 19-p 552 note 43, and the verity and conclusiveness of the judgment record in the C.J.S. title Judgments § 132, also 34 C.J. p 95 note 22-p 96 note 32.

If a court has exercised special powers, and its judgment or decree recites a compliance with the statute, it will conclusively be presumed that the court acted on sufficient evidence of the facts recited,⁵ and a general recital in the judgment or decree that the statutory requirements have been fulfilled is sufficient, although the facts are not set out in the record;⁶ but if the facts are set out in the record, and it appears therefrom that the statute has not been complied with, the recital of the judgment or decree will not avail.⁷

Service by publication. If the judgment or decree recites the fact of publication, although the record shows nothing further with respect thereto, it is generally held that such recital will raise at least a prima facie presumption that the statutory requirements of service by publication were complied with.⁸

§ 102. Courts of Limited or Special Jurisdiction

The recital of jurisdictional facts in the record of a court of limited or special jurisdiction is conclusive, unless want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the proceedings, and unless jurisdiction depends on a collateral fact which can be decided without going into the merits of the case, in which case the recital may be questioned collaterally and disproved.

Where the record of a court of limited or special jurisdiction declares the ascertainment of the jurisdictional facts, which appears to be made in the exercise of its authority,⁹ it is, as a general rule, conclusive,¹⁰ unless the want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of the record or proceedings.¹¹ This is true at least where the question of jurisdiction is involved in the question which is the gist of the suit, so that it cannot be decided without going into the merits of the case;¹² on the other hand, where jurisdiction depends upon some collateral fact which can be decided without going into the case on its merits, the recital thereof, although constituting prima facie evidence of jurisdiction,¹³ may be questioned collaterally and disproved.¹⁴

A clerical error in the recital of jurisdictional facts is not fatal.¹⁵

J. NECESSITY OF JURISDICTION'S APPEARING OF RECORD

§ 104. Courts of General Jurisdiction

It is generally not necessary that the record of a court of general jurisdiction show the existence of jurisdiction; but, in order for this rule to apply, it should appear from the record that the cause of action comes within the class of cases embraced within the general or ordinary jurisdiction of the court, and the rule does not apply where a statute confers special authority upon such a court, not to be exercised according to the course of the common law.

Since, as appears in § 96 supra, it is presumed that a court of general jurisdiction has the authority which it has assumed to exercise in a particular case, it is not necessary as a general rule, that the record of the proceedings of such court should afin proceedings to sustain a judgment in a state court based upon a materialman's lien, the case being otherwise not cognizable by a state tribunal, but in admiralty.—The Montauk v. Walker, 47 Ill. 335.

Stock in a foreign corporation must be affirmatively shown by the record to be within the court's jurisdiction before the court may proceed to take action to bring it within its control; and where it appears that the shares in question are held by a nonresident who has not appeared or been served, the court has no jurisdiction.—Iron City Sav. Where the chancellor of a circuit other than that in which a bill is brought presides on the hearing of an application for an injunction at chambers, the ground for the exercise of such authority should appear by the record.—Sharman v. Thomas-ton, 67 Ga. 246.

Absence of resident judge and the fact that no other judge, regular or jurisdiction, and there is no proof of facts on which jurisdiction rests, the intendment in favor of jurisdiction must be supported by the record.²⁶ Where a statute gives a nonresident the right to sue in the state courts only when defendant is a citizen, the record must show this jurisdictional fact.²⁷

The necessity, on appeal, of showing by the record matters essential to the jurisdiction of the appellate and lower courts is considered in Appeal and Error §§ 680-690 and §§ 691-692, respectively.

Exercise of special powers. Where a statute confers upon a court of general jurisdiction special authority not belonging to it as such court, and not to be exercised according to the course of the common law, sufficient matter must appear of record or on the face of the proceedings to show the case to be within such special jurisdiction, the court being regarded in this respect as one of limited or special jurisdiction.²⁸

Summary proceedings. As a rule everything necessary to give the court jurisdiction in summary proceedings should appear on the face of the record.²⁹

§ 105. Courts of Inferior, Limited, or Special Jurisdiction

It is usually necessary that the record of a court of inferior, limited, or special jurisdiction affirmatively show that the court had jurisdiction.

There being, as appears in § 97 supra, no presumption in favor of the jurisdiction of a court or tribunal of inferior, limited, or special jurisdiction, it is usually necessary, unless otherwise provided by statute,³⁰ in order to sustain the proceedings of such a court, that the record affirmatively show that the court had jurisdiction;³¹ this is held, by some authorities, to apply both to subject matter and parties,³² but there is also authority for the view that the rule is limited to the jurisdiction of the subject matter, and that, when this jurisdiction has once vested, the rules which govern its exercise as to the person are generally the same as those applicable to courts of general jurisdiction.³³

The jurisdictional facts required to appear of record are the ultimate, rather than the evidentiary, facts,³⁴ and they need not appear in any particular form or language,³⁵ or part of the record.³⁶

In some cases it is held that, if the jurisdictional facts actually existed, a failure of the record to recite or to establish such facts may be supplied by proof aliunde;³⁷ but in other cases this is denied.³⁸

ord matters essential to the jurisdiction of the appellate and lower courts is considered in Appeal and Error §§ 680-690 and §§ 691-692, respectively.

§ 106. Courts of Probate

Records of probate courts must show the existence of jurisdiction where they are regarded as courts of limited, inferior, or special jurisdiction, but not where they are regarded as courts of general jurisdiction.

In so far as probate courts, or courts exercising probate jurisdiction, are regarded as having general jurisdiction, their records need not show affirmatively the existence of facts on which the exercise of their jurisdiction depends.⁴⁰ Where, however,

K. OBJECTIONS TO JURISDICTION, ESTOPPEL, AND WAIVER

§ 107. Grounds for Questioning Jurisdiction

The essential elements, the absence of which may afford grounds of objection to the jurisdiction of a court, have already been discussed in §§ 27-106.

Objections to jurisdiction as to which there may be an estoppel or a waiver are treated infra §§ 108-111.

Jurisdiction and powers of courts of probate jurisdiction generally see infra § 298.

In Utah, "while the requisite jurisdictional facts need not be recited in the order or judgment, yet, to properly invest the court with jurisdiction of the subject-matter, they must somewhere be made to appear in the mandatory record of the court, the record that describes the matter for the court's adjudication and determination and is the foundation of the judgment or sequestrating order, the record which resists all objections on collateral attack."—*Stockyards Nat. § 108. Estoppel to Deny Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction of the subject matter cannot be conferred by estoppel; but one who invokes or consents to a court's jurisdiction is estopped to question it on any ground other than that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Jurisdiction of the subject matter cannot be conferred upon a court by, or be based on, the estoppel of a party to deny that it exists.⁴⁴ As to other objections to jurisdiction, there may be an estoppel,⁴⁵

Property in custody of another court

A mortgagee who has instituted foreclosure proceedings in a state court is not estopped to question the jurisdiction of the federal court thereafter to appoint a receiver of the property, even though he accepts redemption money raised from the sale of the receiver's certificates.—*York v. A party who obtains an order in equity staying the trial of a law action is estopped to question the jurisdiction of equity to issue the order.—Smith Engineering Co. v. Pray, C.C.A., 61 F.2d 687, affirming 58 F.2d 926, and certiorari denied 53 S.Ct. 594, 289 U.S. 733, 77 L.Ed. 1482.

Formal order transferring case

Where cause was pending in one district court and, without formal order transferring cause, parties appeared before another district court of same county and announced ready for trial and proceeded to trial without objection, it could not thereafter be urged that court hearing cause was without jurisdiction.—Allen v. Farm & Home Savings & Loan Ass'n

as in the case of objections to the manner in which, or the steps by which, the court obtained jurisdiction,⁴⁶ or to the venue.⁴⁷

Where the court has general jurisdiction of the subject matter, a party may be estopped to question its jurisdiction of the particular case.⁴⁸ A party may be estopped to invoke the jurisdiction of another court.⁴⁹

What constitutes estoppel. Save where the court is completely without jurisdiction of the subject matter, a party will be estopped to question the court's jurisdiction if he invokes it,⁵⁰ as by instituting an action⁵¹ or filing a counterclaim or bring-

Law or equity action

(1) An objection to equity jurisdiction on the ground that an adequate remedy is available at law may be waived.—Pedro v. Vey, 46 P.2d 582, 150 Or. 415.

(2) "Where a court has general jurisdiction of civil actions at law and also of all equity causes, and the subject-matter of a suit or action and the relief sought are within the jurisdiction of the court . . . the question whether the relief sought should be by an action at law or by a suit in equity does not ordinarily involve the power of the court to determine the matter, but it is rather a matter of procedure, at least, where the right to a jury trial is not unlawfully denied."—Harvey v. § 111. — Proceeding after Objection Overruled

The objection that there is no jurisdiction of the subject matter is not waived by proceeding with the case on the merits after the objection is overruled; and the same is true, according to most authorities, as to other objections to jurisdiction, provided no affirmative relief, not necessary to a defense, is requested.

The objection that there is an absolute lack of jurisdiction of the subject matter is not waived by proceeding on the merits after the objection is overruled,⁹⁰ or by failing to take a preliminary appeal.⁹¹

Where the objection to jurisdiction is one other than that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, the objecting party is held, by some authorities, to waive his objection to jurisdiction by proceeding with the case on the merits after his objection has been overruled,⁹² unless the trial court compels submission of the merits to the jury, conditional upon the jury's finding for plaintiff upon the jurisdictional question;⁹³ the majority view, however, is that the objecting party does not waive the objection, after it is overruled, by proceeding with his case,⁹⁴ or by moving for a new trial on the

L. DETERMINATION OF JURISDICTIONAL QUESTIONS

§ 112. In General

The question of jurisdiction will be determined without regard to hardship or the merits of the case, and, in general, so as to sustain the court's jurisdiction where possible. It is to be determined in the first instance from the pleadings, being primarily a question for the court, although disputed questions of fact are for the jury. One who seeks action by a court has the burden of demonstrating its jurisdiction to grant the relief sought.

It is not usual to defeat the jurisdiction of any court, in civil actions, by rigid construction, where the matter is fairly doubtful, and jurisdiction may fairly be retained;⁹⁹ but it has been said that superior courts will rule strictly with regard to matters of jurisdiction of inferior courts for the purpose of keeping the latter tribunals strictly within the limits of their jurisdiction.¹ In determining the Reason for rule

"Defendant did not merely defend against plaintiff's claim. He also asserted an affirmative cause of action against plaintiff and asked for an affirmative judgment against him. . . . By doing so he voluntarily invoked the power of the court in his own behalf, and thereby gave the court jurisdiction over him."—Morehart v. Furley, 182 N.W. 723, 724, 141 Minn. 56.

Motion to make more definite

Filing a demurrer to the petition and moving to make it more definite is not a request for affirmative relief such as will waive defendant's objection to jurisdiction over his person.—Commonwealth Cotton Oil Co. v. Hudson, 161 P. 535, 62 Okl. 23.

In an election contest, where defendant appeared specially and objected to the jurisdiction of the court over his person, his request for additional time in which to plead, his motion to dismiss on the ground that plaintiff was not a proper party, his request for stay of execution until final judgment, and his answer by way of cross petition and counter contest, held not to invoke the jurisdiction of the court in matters unnecessary to his defense so as to result in a waiver of his objection.—Braden v. Williams, 222 P. 948, 101 Okl. 11.

98. Ky.—Brumleve v. Cronan, 197 S.W. 498, 176 Ky. 818.

Answer not mentioning plea to jurisdiction

(1) Objection to jurisdiction, if raised by motion to quash, held waived by filing of answer to merits consisting only of general denial.—Joe Dan Market v. Wentz, 13 S.W.2d 641, 321 Mo. 943, transferred 20 S.W.2d 567, 223 Mo.App. 772.

(2) Where defendant's motion to dismiss, in the nature of a plea to the jurisdiction, was overruled, and he then appeared generally for the purpose of taking change of venue, which was granted, and thereafter filed an answer without reference to the plea to the jurisdiction, defendant waived the jurisdictional question, notwithstanding his having excepted to the overruling of a motion to dismiss.—Cotton Lumber Co. v. La Crosse Lumber Co., 204 S.W. 957, 200 Mo.App. 7.

Vt.—Stanley v. Barker, 25 Vt. 507. Presumptions as to jurisdiction see supra §§ 96–100.

Contract or tort

When an action can be fairly treated as based either on contract or on tort, a court, to support jurisdiction, will sustain the election made by plaintiff.—Roeback v. Short, 144 S.E. 515, 196 N.C. 61—Mitchem v. Pasour, 92 S.E. 322, 173 N.C. 487.

Imperfect evidence of jurisdictional facts

"If the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction did exist, jurisdiction was acquired, however imperfect the evidence of those facts before the court." — Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Ashauer, 126 N.W. 118, 115, 142 Wis. 646.

Misdescription of defendants' capacity

On motion to dismiss a complaint for want of jurisdiction of defendants, sued "as executors and trustees," where action cannot be maintained against them in their capacity as executors, it was held that the erroneous description of the capacity in which they are being sued may be disregarded where the complaint shows that they have been sued as trustees, rather than as executors.—Everhart v. Provident Life & Trust Co. of Philadelphia, 195 N.Y.S. 388, 118 Misc. 852.

Action against state

When the jurisdiction of a court is questioned on the ground that the action is really against the state, the court will look behind the nominal parties to the record to ascertain the real parties to the controversy, dismissing the action if it is really against the state, and retaining jurisdiction if it is not.—Salem Flouring Mills Co. v. Lord, 69 P. 1033, 70 P. 832, 42 Or. 82.

question of jurisdiction, considerations of hardship,² or of the merits of the case,³ can play no part, nor is the convenience of the litigants or witnesses controlling.⁴ Jurisdiction is to be determined as of the time the suit was commenced.⁵

The court, in determining whether it has jurisdiction at common law, may inquire whether a statutory remedy exists;⁶ but the existence of a remedy in another state cannot be shown to defeat jurisdiction.⁷

Pleadings. The question of jurisdiction is to be determined in the first instance from the pleadings,⁸ the allegations of which must be assumed to be true.⁹ The fact that the cause of action, as pleaded, is within the court's jurisdiction, or that the pleadings allege all of the requisite jurisdictional facts, is not conclusive as to the court's jurisdiction.¹⁰

Where it appears from the face of the complaint that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter, the defect cannot be cured by the evidence or the verdict.¹¹ Omission¹² or error¹³ in the allega-

Equity jurisdiction

Where a court of equity has jurisdiction of parties and subject matter, the fact that the pleadings fail to show a right to equitable relief does not render the court's decree, granting such relief, void.—Malone v. Meres, 109 So. 677, 91 Fla. 709.

The rule is that, in the trial of a case, if at any time during its progress it becomes apparent that the court has no authority under the law to adjudicate the issues presented, it becomes the duty of the court to dismiss it."—Galley v. tions with respect to venue may be cured by the evidence. Objections to jurisdiction not appearing on the face of the complaint cannot be raised by a motion to dismiss the proceeding for lack of jurisdiction, being matter of defense;¹⁴ they may be set up by way of answer, special plea, or affidavit of defense, or in any other appropriate manner.¹⁵ Allegations which are sufficient to confer jurisdiction if made in good faith can only be attacked by a special plea setting up lack of good faith.¹⁶

Burden of proof. Any person seeking the affirmative action of a court has the burden of demonstrating its jurisdiction to grant the relief sought.¹⁷ An objection to jurisdiction over the person, either on account of irregularity of service of summons or because the action was brought in the wrong county, must be supported by the evidence when the record does not show facts going to support the objection,¹⁸ unless the facts are admitted;¹⁹ but it has been held that, where defendant appears specially to challenge the court's jurisdiction over his person, the burden of proof is on plaintiff.²⁰ A defendant pleading against a court's jurisdiction that plaintiff is not a bona fide resident or citizen of the state has the burden of proof on such issue;²¹ and a defendant attacking the jurisdiction of another court, a former proceeding in which is the basis of the action, has the burden of proving that, as he claims, plaintiff was not within the jurisdictional limits of such court.²²

Trial of issue; question for court or jury. Jurisdiction has broadly been said to be a question for the court,²³ and not for the jury,²⁴ its determination resting in the sound judicial discretion of the court.²⁵ A question of jurisdiction not resting on contested facts is one of law;²⁶ but a disputed question of fact must be determined as such a question,²⁷ and where jurisdiction is dependent on questions of fact, the jury may, subject to the direction of the court as to matters of law, affirm or deny jurisdiction by a general verdict.²⁸ Jurisdictional facts put in issue by the pleadings must be proved.²⁹

Where there is a conflict between the parties as to the existence of a jurisdictional fact, the court should not decide the question on affidavits,³⁰ even with the consent of the parties;³¹ in such case the dispute should be determined by the taking of evidence,³² either at a hearing on that issue³³ or at the trial of the case.³⁴

Under a Pennsylvania statute, providing that where the question of jurisdiction is raised in the court of first instance it shall be preliminarily determined by the court on the pleadings or with depositions, the procedure set forth must be followed

strictly when a litigant wishes to raise solely a jurisdictional question.³⁵ Such statute cannot be availed of for any purpose except the disposition of questions of jurisdiction without a trial on the merits, and was not intended to furnish a short cut to a determination of the issues raised by the pleadings³⁶ or otherwise;³⁷ and in a proceeding based on the statute, no other matters are open to inquiry than jurisdiction over defendant's person and over the cause of action.³⁸ Determination of jurisdiction of appellate court see Appeal and Error § 45.

After judgment

A court may determine the question of jurisdiction at any time in the proceedings of the cause, either before or after judgment.—Williams v. Sherman, 212 P. 971, 36 Idaho 494.

After cause has been removed from a state to a federal court, it is for the latter court alone to determine questions with respect to its jurisdiction.—Illius v. New York, etc., R. Co., 13 N.Y. 597, followed in Fargo v. McVicker, 55 Barb. 437, 38 How.Pr. 21.

other, one cannot bind the other on a question of jurisdiction."—Subers v. Hirschensohn, 127 S.E. 825, 827, 33 Ga.App. 752, citing Corpus Juris.

(2) Where the question of jurisdiction as between two courts, in each of which an action involving the same transaction has been instituted, depends on a question of fact, the proper court to decide the issue of jurisdiction is the one in which the pleadings raise the question.—Russell v. Taylor, 49 S.W.2d 733, 121 Tex. 450.

Status of would-be litigant

(1) The question of the status of any would-be litigant in the surrogate's court must be determined as a preliminary matter, and the authority to make such determination is inherent in the general grant of jurisdiction to the court.—In re Grube's Will, 7 N.Y.S.2d 194, 169 Misc. 170.

These rules apply irrespective of the wishes of the parties, or either of them.⁵⁴

Where a party mistakes his remedy, as by improperly proceeding by mandamus or quo warranto, the court may, of its own motion, consider the propriety of the proceeding.⁵⁵

§ 115. Effect of Decision

A court's decision as to its jurisdiction has the same effect and conclusiveness as its decision on any other matter within its jurisdiction; but a court cannot, by an erroneous decision on a question of law, add to, or divest itself of, its jurisdiction.

Since, as appears in § 113 supra, a court has power to decide as to its own jurisdiction in any particular case, it follows that its decision as to its jurisdiction will have the same effect and conclusiveness as would its decision on any other matter within its jurisdiction;⁵⁶ and where the jurisdiction of a court depends on a fact which it is required to ascertain, its judgment determining that such fact does or does not exist is conclusive on the question of jurisdiction, until set aside or reversed by direct proceedings, and cannot be attacked collaterally.⁵⁷ Where the question of jurisdiction is one of law, a court cannot by an erroneous decision acquire jurisdiction which it has not, or divest itself of jurisdiction which it has.⁵⁸

A. PROCEEDINGS AND ACTS WITHOUT JURISDICTION

§ 116. In General

The acts and proceedings of a court which is without jurisdiction in the particular case, or is acting in excess of its jurisdiction, are void.

Where a court is without jurisdiction in the particular case, its acts and proceedings can be of no force or validity, and are a mere nullity and void, not voidable,⁵⁹ even prior to reversal,⁶⁰ whether the lack of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record or by proof outside of it;⁶¹ likewise, a court's acts in excess of its jurisdiction are void, even if it has jurisdiction of the subject matter of the action and of the parties,⁶² as where a court of special or limited jurisdiction exceeds its powers.⁶³ If jurisdiction did not exist at the time when action was taken, a subsequent enlargement of the jurisdiction of the court to an extent which would authorize what was done cannot cure the defect or render the action previously taken valid;⁶⁴ but it has been held that if after a cause has been dismissed for want of jurisdiction the court acquires jurisdiction of the subject matter, a reinstatement of the case by consent vests the court with full jurisdiction.⁶⁵

Amendment conferring jurisdiction. Where a court is without jurisdiction, it has no power to allow an amendment which would confer jurisdiction, since that in itself would be an exercise of jurisdiction.⁶⁶

§ 118. Proceedings Subsequent to Decision That No Jurisdiction Exists

III. CREATION, CONSTITUTION, AND OFFICERS OF COURTS

A. CREATION, ORGANIZATION, ABOLITION, REORGANIZATION, CONSOLIDATION, AND TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION OF COURTS

§ 120. Source of Power

The constitution is the ultimate source of the judicial power of courts.

The constitution, as the dispenser of the sovereign power of a state, is the ultimate source of the judicial power of courts.⁷⁹ To it all courts owe their existence⁸⁰ and jurisdiction.⁸¹ Unless a court's authority emanates from the supreme power of the state, the court itself is an absolute nullity, and all its proceedings are utterly void.⁸² No person can, in the absence of authority at law, create a court⁸³ and preside over the same as judge;⁸⁴ nor can any judge hold a court which is unconstitutional in its organization.⁸⁵ Of course, the power of a state to determine the limits of jurisdiction of its courts is subject to restrictions imposed by the federal constitution,⁸⁶ but a provision of the federal constitution defining the extent of judicial power is inapplicable to the judicial power of state courts.⁸⁷

§ 121. Constitutional and Legislative Power

Unless such power is conferred on it by the constitution, the legislature has no power to confer or withdraw jurisdiction or judicial power, and a court's jurisdiction is regulated by the constitution or by statutes enacted pursuant thereto.

Since, as discussed in the preceding section, the ultimate source of the judicial power of courts is the constitution, it follows and is almost universally recognized that, unless such power is conferred on it by the constitution, the legislature has no power to confer or withdraw jurisdiction or judicial power,⁸⁸ or to create or abolish courts,⁸⁹ although there is authority holding that the legislature has such power unless inhibited by the constitution.⁹⁰ This is the fundamental rule governing legislative power with respect to courts, and applies alike to courts created directly by constitutional provision, hereinafter considered in § 122, and to courts created by the legislature pursuant to delegated power, considered in § 126 infra. The jurisdiction of a tribunal is regulated by the constitution or by statutes enacted pursuant thereto.⁹¹ Accordingly, no tribunal with the attributes of a court, other than those named in a state constitution, can ordinarily be established without an act of the legislature.⁹²

On the admission of a new state into the Union congress has power to vest in the state courts, as successors to the territorial courts, jurisdiction over the continued prosecution of criminal cases not of a federal character, the state consenting,⁹³ or it may transfer jurisdiction with respect to crimes against the United States from the territorial to the federal courts.⁹⁴ With respect to civil actions, it has been held that on the admission of a state into the federal Union, the state district court became the successor of the territorial district court as to all actions no longer pending, and the judgments of such territorial district court passed under the jurisdiction of the state district court.⁹⁵

Apart from the various rules considered elsewhere in §§ 121-133, reference is made in the note to cases in which the courts have had under consideration the construction and effect of constitutional and statutory provisions, and the validity of various statutory provisions, with respect to particular courts.⁹⁶

§ 122. — General and Specific Rules

Except in so far as authorized by the constitution, the legislature cannot abolish, divide, reorganize, or consolidate constitutional courts, nor alter or diminish the essentials of the jurisdiction, functions, or judicial powers conferred on such courts.

Some constitutions establish a number of designated courts, vest them with judicial power, and apportion jurisdiction among them.⁹⁷ Such constitutional grants, except as they may reserve some of the judicial power and delegate its distribution or apportionment, dispose of the whole of such power residing in the sovereignty, leaving none at the disposal of the legislature;⁹⁸ and the courts so estab-

Constitutional court defined

(1) "A constitutional court is one which is named or described and expressly protected by the Constitution . . . or is one which is recognized by name or definite description in the Constitution but is given no express protection."—Gorham v. Robinson, 186 A. 832, 850, 57 R.I. 1.

(2) However, it has been held that a court named in a constitution but vested with no jurisdiction is not a "constitutional court."—Bradford v. Richardson, 97 S.E. 58, 111 S.C. 205.

(3) The fact that the power to establish a particular court is vested by the constitution in the legislature does not support a contention that such court is not "provided for," that is, created and established, by the constitution.

Colo.—People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455. Neb.—State ex rel. Hunter v. Maguire, 285 N.W. 921, 923, citing Corpus Juris.

Territorial jurisdiction

(1) Where the constitution fixes the territorial jurisdiction of particular courts, the legislature cannot extend such jurisdiction beyond the constitutional limitations.—Wilmington Trust Co. v. Baldwin, Del. Super., 195 A. 287—15 C.J. p 731 note 61 [f], p 862 note 8.

(2) Nor can the legislature do this even with respect to actions brought for the benefit of the state itself.—State v. Royal Consol. Mining Co., 202 P. 133, 187 Cal. 343.

Jurisdiction at common law

Legislature cannot confer jurisdiction on supreme court and courts of civil appeals beyond limits of original and appellate power as comprehended by common law, except as common law has been abrogated or modified directly or by necessary implication by constitution itself.—Morrow v. Corbin, 62 S.W.2d 641, 122 Tex. 553.

Abrogating concurrent jurisdiction

Where the constitution gives two courts concurrent jurisdiction of a particular matter, the legislature cannot make the jurisdiction of one of such courts exclusive.—State v. Jones, 137 P. 544, 15 Ariz. 215.

take from courts power which it does not give.³ Thus, the legislature cannot destroy jurisdiction by depriving a party of the right to appeal to the courts for redress of a legal wrong,⁴ nor can it authorize a court to divest itself of constitutionally imposed exclusive jurisdiction.⁵ However, a change of the substantive law by the legislature, which increases or decreases the subject matter on which the jurisdiction of the courts operates, is not an unconstitutional interference with such jurisdiction.⁶

On the other hand, to the extent that the constitution allows or does not prohibit, the legislature may legislate with respect to constitutional courts;⁷ and thus, depending on the particular constitutional provisions involved, may increase,⁸ diminish, or change their jurisdiction,⁹ confer on them any additional jurisdiction that it deems advisable,⁹ may extend their jurisdiction in harmony with their character and general jurisdiction, without infringing on the inherent or constitutional powers of any other court,¹⁰ or may abridge their jurisdiction

Restriction imposed by court itself on the exercise of its inherent equity jurisdiction may be removed by legislature.—Hawkins v. Rellim Inv. Co., 110 So. 350, 92 Fla. 784.

Particular constitutional provisions construed

(1) A provision continuing the jurisdiction of a court as fixed by prior constitutions "unless otherwise provided," permits the legislature to add to such jurisdiction in any appropriate and germane particular.—Wilmington Trust Co. v. Baldwin, Del.Super., 195 A. 287.

(2) The legislature has power, under a constitutional provision con-

without infringing on their inherent powers.¹¹ Similarly, it has been held that the legislature may regulate to some extent the quantity of the business of a court by reasonably contracting or enlarging the limits of the exercise of its jurisdiction,¹² or may, pursuant to authority granted by the constitution, enact a statute which incidentally results in the elimination of a constitutional court.¹³ Further, to the extent that the legislature properly confers additional jurisdiction on a constitutional court, it may withdraw such jurisdiction.¹⁴

Conferring concurrent jurisdiction. The legislature may confer on a court jurisdiction concurrent with that of another court, where such act is a legitimate exercise of the power conferred on the legislature, having regard also to such jurisdiction as may be conferred on the latter court by the constitution of the state.¹⁵ Thus, the mere grant of jurisdiction by the constitution to certain courts will not prevent the legislature from conferring concurrent jurisdiction on subordinate¹⁶ or higher¹⁷ courts, and this may be done under the provisions of the several state constitutions, where the jurisdiction granted by the constitution is not exclusive.¹⁸ However, concurrent jurisdiction with a constitutional court cannot be conferred on another tribunal where the purpose of such grant is to deprive the constitutional court of its general jurisdiction,¹⁹ or its effect is to impair the court's jurisdiction over matters exclusively within its province.²⁰ A constitutional provision that the legisla-fering certain jurisdiction on designated courts "subject to such changes as may be made by law," to add to, take from, or otherwise change the jurisdiction so conferred.—Penn Anthracite Mining Co. v. Anthracite Miners of Pennsylvania, 178 A. 291, 318 Pa. 401, affirming 174 A. 11, 114 Pa.Super. 7.

(3) A provision giving a court certain powers "and all the other jurisdiction and powers vested by the laws" of the state, is prospective in character, and does not confine such court's powers to those vested at the time the constitution was promulgated.—Woods v. Spoturno, 183 A. 319, 7 W.W.Harr., Del., 295, reversed on other grounds Spoturno v. Woods, 192 A. 689, 8 W.W.Harr. 378.

(4) A constitutional provision conferring on a court certain appellate and original jurisdiction and "such other and further jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by law," permits the legislature to confer original jurisdiction on such court in all matters of general public interest directly affecting the state's sovereign rights and powers.—In re State Treasury Note Indebtedness, 90 F.2d 19, 185 Okl. 10.

(5) A provision that a particular court "shall have both chancery and common-law jurisdiction, and such other jurisdiction as the Legislature may provide," gives the legislature power to enlarge, but not to limit, the general jurisdiction so conferred.—State ex rel. Wright v. Barney, 276 N.W. 676, 133 Neb. 676.

(6) A constitutional provision providing for the establishment of a particular court was held to confer no jurisdiction on it, but simply to give it the capacity to receive jurisdiction from the legislature.—Cummins v. Kinsinger, 29 Ohio N.P., N.S., 34.

ture may establish courts inferior to a named constitutional court, with a limited jurisdiction, does not authorize the legislature to establish a court with a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the constitutional court.²¹ Courts of law may be invested with jurisdiction concurrent with courts of equity,²² although they cannot exercise equitable jurisdiction in cases where complete justice can be done only by a court possessing full equity powers.²³

Conflicting and concurrent jurisdiction of courts generally is considered infra § 486 et seq.

Conferring judicial powers on other than courts. Unless the constitution otherwise provides, judicial power is to be vested exclusively in the courts,²⁴ and the legislature has no authority to confer such power on any person or class of persons other than the courts²⁵ or judicial officers²⁶ provided for in the constitution. Obviously, however, statutes which confer on nonjudicial persons or bodies functions which are not judicial, are not unconstitutional on this ground.²⁷

Distinction between law and equity courts. A distinction between the jurisdiction of courts of law and of equity made by the constitution must be observed by the legislature;²⁸ but where it is provided by the constitution that the legislature shall, as far as practicable, abolish distinctions between law and equity proceedings, the fact that a certain proceeding was formerly within the jurisdiction of a court of equity furnishes no reason for holding that the legislature may not properly confer jurisdiction of a similar proceeding on a court of law,²⁹ and such an extension of the jurisdiction of law courts has been held valid in the absence of any constitutional prohibition.³⁰

Regulation. The legislature always has power, within constitutional limitations, to regulate the exercise of jurisdiction conferred by the constitution,³¹ as by prescribing new conditions under

Special statutory proceedings. Where the legislature creates special statutory proceedings involving rights previously unknown to law and equity and providing remedies therefor, the legislature may confer jurisdiction thereof on any court to the exclusion of others,³⁹ provided the statute furnishes adequate protection of the rights of persons concerned;⁴⁰ but it cannot, in so doing, take away the constitutionally protected jurisdiction of other courts in so far as it is applicable to the controversy involved.⁴¹ An attempt by the legislature, in an act which continues in force statutes giving a right of action, to prohibit the court from hearing particular suits under such statutes, is an unconstitutional invasion of the court's jurisdiction.⁴²

§ 123. — General and Specific Constitutional Provisions

Effect will be given to specific constitutional provisions respecting the creation, abolition, organization, and jurisdiction of courts.

In addition to vesting judicial power in certain courts, and delegating authority to create and control the jurisdiction of courts, already considered in § 122, state constitutions frequently contain other provisions affecting courts, the effect of such provisions, as has been shown by cases construing or applying them, being variously to divide a state into judicial circuits, districts, etc.,⁴⁴ or to provide that this shall be done;⁴⁵ to divide counties;⁴⁶ to abolish an entire judiciary system created and established under a prior constitution;⁴⁷ to abolish particular courts, divest and transfer their jurisdiction, or substitute other courts in their place;⁴⁸ to create one court as the successor of another, giving it jurisdiction over all causes and proceedings pending in the abolished court;⁴⁹ to provide that causes shall be transferred or that jurisdiction over the same shall be vested in other courts or tribunals;⁵⁰ to continue certain courts and their jurisdiction⁵¹

until the legislature shall act;⁵² to reorganize the judiciary and divest them of jurisdiction⁵³ except over specified causes;⁵⁴ to limit or specify the number of judges in counties or other judicial divisions;⁵⁵ to provide for uniformity in organization, proceedings, practice, and jurisdiction in certain courts;⁵⁶ to specify expressly the limitation of jurisdiction in designated courts;⁵⁷ to make specific provision covering the organization of courts, the extent and number of judicial districts, the election of judges, terms of courts, and place of holding the same until otherwise provided by law, and provide for officers thereof;⁵⁸ and to restrict legislative power respecting courts by designating the manner, mode, and time of its exercise, or by otherwise placing limitations thereon as to population, elections, extent of territory or districts, etc.⁵⁹

§ 124. — Exclusive Constitutional Provisions

The legislature cannot interfere with jurisdiction which is conferred on a court by exclusive constitutional provisions.

Provision self-executing

Where the intent of a constitutional provision is to abrogate special legislation and to establish uniformity in the powers, proceedings, and practice of all courts of the same class or grade, the provision is self-executing and operates as an abrogation of existing special legislation in conflict therewith, since a provision designed to remove an existing mischief will never be construed as dependent for its efficacy and operation on legislative will. Ill.—People v. Rumsey, 64 Ill. 44.

Courts of "same class or grade"

Under a provision requiring that organization, jurisdiction, and powers of all courts of same class or grade shall be uniform, words "class" and "grade" are synonymous, and are to be given their ordinary, and not a technical, meaning.—Commonwealth ex rel. Margiotti v. Sutton, 193 A. 250, 327 Pa. 337.

courts,⁶¹ or from conferring any additional jurisdiction on such courts,⁶² or from conferring all or a part of such courts' jurisdiction on other courts.⁶³ Thus, unless the constitution provides for other courts,⁶⁴ the specification therein of courts which may exercise judicial power operates as a limitation of the legislature's power to create other courts.⁶⁵ A constitutional restriction, however, as to the creation of new and enlarged circuits will not be implied from a limitation as to changes in the boundaries of circuits, the general rule which is applicable being that if no technical words are employed in a constitution it admits of no interpretation other than that which the common understanding places on it.⁶⁶

§ 125. — Power of Congress as to State Courts

Although congress has no power to create or regulate state courts, it may authorize state courts to enforce a cause of action created by federal act; but congress cannot require that state courts take cognizance of such actions.

Strictly speaking, congress cannot confer judicial power⁶⁷ or impose a judicial duty⁶⁸ on state courts, nor create,⁶⁹ define,⁷⁰ or enlarge⁷¹ their jurisdiction, nor regulate nor control their modes of procedure⁷² or the remedies available therein under state statutes.⁷³ Nevertheless, when acting within its constitutional powers, congress may control and regulate the power of the several states to provide for the determination of controversies in their courts,⁷⁴ but it may not restrict such power except in conformity to the judiciary sections of the federal constitution.⁷⁵ Congress may authorize state courts to enforce a cause of action created by a federal act,⁷⁶ where the jurisdiction of the state courts,

Litigable claims

Under a constitutional provision securing to the supreme court "general jurisdiction in law and equity," the test and measure of its jurisdiction of a given claim or right is whether it is litigable. If it is litigable, it cannot be withdrawn from the court's jurisdiction; if it is not litigable, it may be sent elsewhere for decision.—*People ex rel. Crane v. Rule criticized

"It was urged . . . that, al-

under the local law, is adequate to the occasion;⁷⁷ and when congress does so, it adopts the prevailing rules of procedure in the state.⁷⁸ The mere fact, however, that congress declares that state courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction of a particular cause of action, does not require that they shall take cognizance of such actions,⁷⁹ nor does it exempt a citizen of any state from the equitable jurisdiction of its courts to restrain the bringing of such an action in another state.⁸⁰ Congress cannot appoint a judge to a state court, much less create a state court and appoint a judge to administer it.⁸¹ The power of congress to confer judicial power on state courts, apart from the duty of such courts to accept or exercise the power thus conferred, is grounded on the theory that the provisions of the federal constitution vesting judicial power as to certain classes of cases in designated courts of the United States, did not prohibit congress from vesting judicial power as to other cases in other courts or magistrates, where the exercise of such power is an appropriate means by which to use the powers granted to the legislative department of the government.⁸²

though Congress could not confer jurisdiction on a State so as to compel its exercise, yet it would be legitimate if the Court was willing to accept it. This is to me a solecism. A court is a creature of the Constitution and laws under which it exists. To exercise any power not derived from such Constitution and laws would necessarily be a usurpation. It sounds curious to say, 'Congress has no authority to give this power to the Court, yet the Court exercises this power by virtue of the authority of Congress.'—Ex p. Knowles, 5 Cal. 300, 301.

§ 126. Power Delegated to Legislature and Exercise Thereof

Particular matters with regard to power delegated by the constitution to the legislature to create, abolish, and regulate the jurisdiction of courts will be discussed in detail in the sections immediately following. Consult Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 127. — Governing Principles

The legislature in exercising delegated authority with respect to the existence or jurisdiction of courts must act in conformity with the constitution granting such power.

The basic limitation on the exercise by the legislature of any power delegated to it to legislate with respect to the existence or jurisdiction of courts is that it must act in conformity with the organic law granting or delegating the power; in other words, it may not, while exercising the power respecting courts conferred by some provisions of the constitution, violate any other provisions thereof.⁸³ This principle runs through all the decisions and governs statutes relating to inferior courts in legislature to create certain designated courts does not apply to a court created by it under a prior constitution containing no such limitation.—Failing v. Grounds, 145 N.Y.S. 427, 160 App.Div. 71.

Enacting clause

In an act providing merely for the reorganization or rearrangement of a constitutional court, the enacting clause need not be in literal compliance with the constitution, where the substance of the required enacting words remains, there being a distinction between mandatory and directory provisions as applied to organic law.—State v. Harris, 17 So. 129, 47 La. Ann. 336.

Designation of court

Where the legislature is empowered to establish as many courts of a certain class within specified limits as the public interest may require, an act establishing a court of the same class as provided is constitutional, even though it omits its specific name or denomination.—State v. Anderson, 29 La. Ann. 774.

Conferring jurisdiction "by general law"

Constitutional provision giving certain courts "such other jurisdiction as may be provided for by general law" is complied with by any law, general in its nature, providing other jurisdiction for such courts, and does not limit the giving of further jurisdiction to such courts to a single general law.—People ex rel. Rusch v. Ladwig, 7 N.E.2d 313, 365 Ill. 574.

general,⁸⁴ to courts of equity or chancery in general,⁸⁵ to the creation of courts of either exclusive⁸⁶ or concurrent⁸⁷ jurisdiction, to statutes providing or failing to provide for judges,⁸⁸ and, more particularly, to statutes relating to various of the matters considered infra in §§ 129-138. Accordingly, the legislature's exercise of delegated power with respect to courts is subject to a constitutional provision against partial, discriminatory, and capricious laws,⁸⁹ or against special laws,⁹⁰ or requiring courts of the same grade or class to be uniform,⁹¹ although, of course, uniformity is not essential where the constitution does not require it.⁹² In the exercise of such power, the legislature may not violate the rule, already discussed in § 122, against infringing upon or divesting the jurisdiction of constitutional courts,⁹³ as by taking the jurisdiction from one court and vesting it in another,⁹⁴ or by converting local courts into courts of general jurisdiction.⁹⁵ Further, the legislature cannot confer upon a statutory court powers prohibited⁹⁶ or not authorized⁹⁷ by the constitution, or reserved exclusively to other courts,⁹⁸ or which it could not confer on courts already existing;⁹⁹ nor may it, in prescribing the scope of a statutory court's jurisdiction, disturb a constitutional court's prerogatives.¹

§ 128. — Authority Conferred in General

The terms of the grant of authority determine the authority conferred on the legislature with respect to the existence and jurisdiction of courts. The legislature usually has power to create courts in addition to those specified in the constitution, and to abolish courts it has thus created.

The authority conferred on the legislature with respect to the existence or jurisdiction of courts depends, of course, on the provisions of the particular constitution in question. The legislatures of the several states may be broadly said to have the power, if the particular constitution grants it or does not withhold it, and subject always to the limitations considered in the preceding section, to confer or impose additional authority on courts;² to limit jurisdiction or provide that it shall be exclusive;³ to confer extraterritorial jurisdiction on local courts;⁴ and to confer upon courts jurisdiction of certain suits against nonresidents.⁵

Under the various state constitutions the legislature is generally empowered to create certain courts in addition, and usually subordinate, to those established by the constitution,⁶ even though additional

Hearing "de novo"

An act providing for an "appeal" from the determination of an administrative board to a constitutional court where the matter will be heard "de novo" is not invalid as extending the appellate jurisdiction of the court as fixed in the constitution since on hearing "de novo" court hears matter as court of original and not appellate jurisdiction.—Collier & Wallis v. Astor, 70 P.2d 171, 9 Cal.2d 202.

Territorial jurisdiction

The legislature cannot, without changing its territorial jurisdiction, give an appellate court jurisdiction of a cause arising outside of such jurisdiction.—State v. Nixon, 134 S.W. 538, 232 Mo. 496, followed in State v. Nolte, 134 S.W. 542, 233 Mo. 451—State v. Nixon, 133 S.W. 336, 232 Mo. 98, followed in State v. Nixon, Mo., 133 S.W. 340.

Statutes held valid

(1) A statute forbidding the circuit court to try one convicted of a misdemeanor in the municipal court, where a change of venue had been improperly denied there, is not invalid as interfering with the superintending control and appellate jurisdiction of the circuit court, since an appellate court never has jurisdiction greater than that of the court appealed from.—Green v. Extent of "proper jurisdiction"

Under a constitutional provision that the jurisdiction of a particular court shall be such as properly belongs to a court of appeals, the only jurisdiction which the legislature can confer upon it is to review and revise the judicial action of an inferior tribunal, and such incidental jurisdiction of a quasi-original character as is necessary to preserve its dignity and decorum, and to give full and complete operation to its appellate powers.—Robertson v. Southern Bitulithic Co., 92 So. 580, 129 Miss. 453.

26. Iowa.—Wine v. Jones, 163 N.W. 318, 183 Iowa 1166, modifying opin-

held by the constitution.²⁷ Nevertheless, mere regulation of the exercise of constitutionally vested appellate jurisdiction does not ordinarily come within such prohibitions.²⁸

On the other hand, to the extent that the constitution permits, or does not prohibit, the legislature may create courts of appellate jurisdiction²⁹ or may control the jurisdiction of established appellate courts,³⁰ it may change such jurisdiction,³¹ or regulate,³² limit,³³ or enlarge³⁴ it, provided the enlargement is harmonious with the court's inherent characteristics.³⁵ Accordingly, statutes have been upheld prescribing the mode of taking appeals,³⁶ limiting the right of appeal to cases involving a stated amount,³⁷ limiting the right to certiorari³⁸ or the powers of an appellate court to a review of questions of law,³⁹ making the decision of another court final,⁴⁰ or diminishing the field in which the decision of an intermediate appellate court is final.⁴¹ So too it has been held within the power of the legislature to grant an appellate court authority to review the evidence in equity cases,⁴² or in other cases not involving the right to trial by jury,⁴³ and even in criminal cases;⁴⁴ to confer upon it the right to hear appeals in special cases;⁴⁵ or to review its own decrees;⁴⁶ or to confer concurrent appellate jurisdiction on other courts.⁴⁷ Under appropriate constitutional provisions, the legislature may confer upon appellate courts original jurisdiction with respect to certain matters.⁴⁸ Where the

Matters affecting sovereign rights

(1) In matters of general public interest, which directly affect the sovereign rights and powers of the state, the legislature has power, to confer original jurisdiction upon the supreme court.—In re State Treasury Note Indebtedness, Okl., 90 P.2d 19—El Reno Wholesale Grocery Co. v. Taylor, 209 P. 749, 87 Okl. 140.

(2) So the legislature may confer upon a court, whose jurisdiction is otherwise exclusively appellate, original jurisdiction over suits against the state, where the constitution empowers the legislature to direct in legislature has full power to fix the jurisdiction of a court designated in the constitution it may confer upon it authority to entertain appeals from administrative boards exercising some judicial functions.⁴⁹

The constitutionally established rank or position of an appellate court in the hierarchy of a judicial system cannot be disturbed by the legislature.⁵⁰ Thus a court which is placed by the constitution at the head of the judicial system of a state, there being no appeal from its judgments to any other state tribunal, cannot be deprived of its rank as the highest and ultimate judicial power of the state,⁵¹ as by a transfer of its jurisdiction to another court created by the legislature in any manner so as to make its decisions and opinions final.⁵² This rule, however, does not prevent the legislature from conferring upon intermediate appellate courts jurisdiction over appeals which otherwise would lie to the higher court, provided such intermediate courts are subordinate to the higher court, and their decisions subject to review by it;⁵³ and the legislature can confer such jurisdiction upon courts newly created by it.⁵⁴ Furthermore, to the extent that the constitution permits and the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court or other superior court of the state is not exclusive, the legislature may invest inferior appellate courts with final jurisdiction as to limited classes of cases.⁵⁵

The rule that the power of the legislature to enact laws respecting the existence or jurisdiction of courts may be exercised only in conformity with constitutional provisions, supra § 127, applies with equal force to appellate courts and their jurisdiction.⁵⁶ The validity of statutes dealing with the jurisdiction of appellate courts is generally determined by the nature of the court, the character of the jurisdiction involved, and the effect of the statutes upon the constitutional powers of other courts, in the light of constitutional and statutory intent.⁵⁷ The jurisdiction of an appellate court cannot be taken away except by express terms⁵⁸ or irresistible implication.⁵⁹

§ 130. — County and Probate Courts

Legislative power with respect to county and probate courts depends on constitutional provisions and may be exercised only in conformity therewith.

The power of the legislature with respect to county and probate courts may, in accordance with the general principle stated supra in § 127, be exercised only in conformity with constitutional provisions.⁶⁰ Subject to these limitations, the legislature may, to the extent that it is permitted so to do by the constitution, confer jurisdiction on constitutional coun-

Within constitutional limitations, the legislature may create county courts⁶⁹ and confer jurisdiction upon them.⁷⁰ It may limit or change their jurisdiction when proper provision is made for pending causes,⁷¹ or may abolish such courts entirely.⁷² While, in the absence of constitutional sanction, county courts cannot be created with a jurisdiction coextensive within the county with that of a constitutional circuit court,⁷³ a court may be established with exclusive jurisdiction in specified matters, and as to such matters it will supersede another court, where it is evident that it was intended that there should not be concurrent jurisdiction between the two courts in the same county.⁷⁴ So

To the extent authorized by the constitution, the legislature has power to establish city or municipal courts⁸⁹ and police courts,⁹⁰ and to fix their jurisdiction,⁹¹ even where it involves the carving of the necessary jurisdiction out of other courts.⁹² Depending upon the applicable constitutional provisions it has been variously held that the legislature may⁹³ or may not⁹⁴ give such courts extraterritorial jurisdiction, may give them jurisdiction less extensive than the city limits,⁹⁵ may give them jurisdiction to enforce purely municipal ordinances⁹⁶ only,⁹⁷ or may give them jurisdiction in cases arising under the state laws⁹⁸ concurrently with other courts.⁹⁹ A city court authorized, but not created, by the constitution may be abolished by the legislature,¹ but the legislature may be without power to repeal a city charter establishing a city court.² Various other statutes relating to city, municipal, police, or magistrates' courts have been held valid as against divers contentions,³ such as that they abolished or limited the jurisdiction of justices of the peace,⁴ gave such a court greater jurisdiction than allowed by the constitution,⁵ or created a new inferior local court.⁶

(2) The legislature exceeded its constitutional power in giving municipal and police courts and trial justices in their respective counties concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme and superior courts over all prosecutions for violation of a statute punishing driving automobiles on highways while drunk by maximum sentence of "not more than one year," since prosecutions for infamous crimes must be by indictment.—State v. b. Powers of Municipalities

Municipalities have only such power with respect to the establishment or disestablishment of municipal or police courts as is conferred upon them by constitutional provision or delegated to them by statute.

Since the establishment, and administration of courts of justice is a governmental function of the state rather than a local or municipal function,⁷ a municipality has no power, in the absence of authorization, to create a municipal or police court⁸ or to define the authority of such courts and their procedure.⁹ However, to the extent that the necessary constitutional and statutory authority exists, a municipality may create or bring into operation a city, municipal, or police court,¹⁰ by or under a resolution or ordinance,¹¹ or a charter or amendment thereof,¹² or by a popular election.¹³ A municipality may be authorized to regulate the exercise of jurisdiction conferred on a city court by the constitution.¹⁴

While a statute which, without constitutional authorization, delegates to municipalities the legislative power of creating municipal courts, is invalid,¹⁵ statutes authorizing municipalities under certain circumstances to bring into operation municipal or city courts whose organization and jurisdiction are prescribed by the statute have been held not to constitute an unauthorized delegation of legislative power, but rather a delegation only of the power to determine facts which bring the court into being;¹⁶ hence the delegation of such power does not embrace the power to abolish a court thus created,¹⁷ unless there is also a delegation of power to determine facts upon which its disestablishment may be based.¹⁸ Authority conferred upon a municipality to create municipal or police courts may be exercised only within the limits of such authority.¹⁹

§ 132. — Criminal Courts

Under appropriate constitutional provisions the legislature may create criminal courts and abolish courts so created.

Under appropriate constitutional provisions, the legislature may create a criminal court²⁰ and confer upon it criminal jurisdiction²¹ and limited civil jurisdiction as well,²² and may provide for the incidents necessary to its jurisdiction.²³ A criminal court so established by the legislature may be abolished by it.²⁴ Statutes creating courts of criminal jurisdiction have been held valid as against various contentions,²⁵ such as that they violated rules relating to classification²⁶ or that they created new courts in contravention of the constitution.²⁷

Legislative power with respect to the jurisdiction of criminal courts is considered in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law §§ 114–118, also 16 C.J. p 149 note 36–p 151 note 56.

§ 133. — Special and Temporary Courts and Commissions

a. In general

b. As grant or defeat of judicial power

a. In General

Legislative power with respect to special and temporary courts and commissions is determined by constitutional provisions.

Legislative power with respect to special and temporary courts²⁸ or tribunals,²⁹ or commissions,³⁰ may be exercised only in conformity with constitutional provisions. Thus, while a legislature has been held authorized to establish emergency courts with such jurisdiction as it deems best,³¹ it has also been held that special courts cannot be created for the trial of rights and obligations of particular parties.³² A constitutional provision for the appointment of judges pro tempore of particular courts does not authorize the creation of courts pro tempore in which such appointees shall sit.³³ It has been held that the legislature may abolish special courts,³⁴ and may transfer their jurisdiction³⁵ and the powers appertaining to them³⁶ to commissioners. It has also been considered that jurisdiction ends and a special court is dissolved at the ending of each separate case which it is constituted to try.³⁷

b. As Grant or Defeat of Judicial Power

Committee of justices

A statute authorizing the justices of the supreme court to designate a committee of justices of the courts of civil appeals to pass upon petitions to the supreme court for writs of error, is constitutional; such a statute does not disable or unduly interfere with the functioning of the court from which the committee members are appointed.—San Antonio & A. by the constitution to receive such power, it may confer upon statutory tribunals mixed administrative and quasi-judicial functions.

Although the legislature cannot ordinarily confer purely judicial power upon a body or tribunal other than a court authorized by the constitution to receive such power,³⁸ it may confer upon a statutory tribunal or commission mixed administrative and quasi-judicial functions properly within the sphere of the legislative power.³⁹ Thus legislation authorizing the supreme court to appoint commissioners to assist the court in the performance of its duties is not an exercise of judicial power by the legislature, and is valid, since such legislation confers no judicial powers on such commissioners;⁴⁰ and it has been held that the legislature may create such a tribunal by direct legislation and appointment,⁴¹ although there is authority to the contrary.⁴² Other tribunals which have been held not to constitute courts or to possess judicial powers so as to come within constitutional inhibitions against creating new courts or conferring judicial powers other than as prescribed include courts of claims,⁴³ boards of appraisers,⁴⁴ a board of control for charitable institutions,⁴⁵ and a board of commissioners of a state bar.⁴⁶

Workmen's compensation acts. By the great weight of authority, the creation by workmen's compensation acts of boards or commissions having authority to pass on claims for injuries, find facts, and make awards does not constitute an unwarranted delegation of judicial powers or the unwarranted creation of a judicial tribunal or court.⁴⁷

These decisions are based on the various grounds that such boards or commissions are merely administrative agencies, although exercising quasi judicial powers,⁴⁸ that they do not have the final authority to decide and to render enforceable judgments,⁴⁹ or that, under the compensation acts allowing an election as to whether their provisions shall come into operation, they are in effect or analogous to boards of arbitration by agreement;⁵⁰ and the ease of reaching a decision under such acts has been urged in sustaining them.⁵¹

As against the contention that they deprived the courts of their jurisdiction, not only have elective compensation acts been held not invalid,⁵² but, under a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to provide for the settlement by arbitration, by a board or by the courts, of disputes involving the liability of employers, even a compulsory act vesting exclusive jurisdiction in a commission, in certain circumstances, has been sustained.⁵³

§ 134. Effect of Exercise of Power in General

The effect of an exercise of the power to create, abolish, reorganize, consolidate, or transfer the jurisdiction of a court depends on the intent expressed in the constitutional or statutory provision exercising such power.

A proper and lawful exercise of delegated legislative authority, or the direct exercise of constitutional power, will operate to abolish a court or not, according to the intent expressed or lawfully to be implied within the principles heretofore stated. This intent governs in determining the effect of the adoption of a new constitution; of the creation, alteration, and reorganization of new districts, circuits, or other judicial subdivisions; of the detaching, attaching, annexation, and consolidation of districts and the transfer of jurisdiction in general; and each law must be interpreted and applied accordingly.⁵⁴ The usual rules as to the construction of statutes apply to statutes of this character.⁵⁵ Such a statute should be construed as a whole,⁵⁶ and statutes of this character in pari materia should be read together as one law.⁵⁷ Statutes conferring additional power on courts should be liberally construed,⁵⁸ and any doubt that exists as to whether jurisdiction of a court arises under a new statute ordinarily should be resolved in favor of jurisdiction;⁵⁹ but it has been held that a grant of jurisdiction to an inferior court, which jurisdiction formerly resided in the court to which appeals from the inferior court may be taken, must be strictly construed.⁶⁰ An express statutory exclusion of certain cases is not affected by a subsequent enactment which merely indicates an inclusion thereof.⁶¹

On the other hand, unless the intent to do so is apparent,⁶² the jurisdiction of a court is rarely deemed to be taken away by implication.⁶³ A limi-

Restoration of jurisdiction

Where under the state constitution a court is vested with original jurisdiction over certain proceedings, of which it cannot be deprived except by direct legislation, on repeal of a statute vesting such jurisdiction in another court, the jurisdiction of the original court is restored.—Stapleton v. Commonwealth, 3 S.W. 793 —Anderson v. Commonwealth, 3 S.W. 127.

Provision for transfer

A statute providing that a court in which a particular action is brought should, under certain circumstances, transfer it to the county in which it should properly be tried does not impair or destroy the constitutional jurisdiction of the original court to hear and determine such action.—Lloyds Casualty Co. of New York v. Lem, Tex.Civ.App., 62 S.W.2d 497, error dismissed.

Where equity jurisdiction was not conferred by statute but arose because there was no other adequate remedy, an amendment conferring sole jurisdiction on another court abolishes, by implication, the equity jurisdiction theretofore entertained.—*White v. Act must plainly evidence intent that legislative abolition of the court shall follow.—State ex rel. Landis v. Dickinson, 138 So. 376, 103 Fla. 907.

Equity powers

(1) Creation of probate courts did not take away equity powers of circuit court not expressly conferred on probate court.—Primeau v. Primeau, 297 S.W. 382, 317 Mo. 828.

(2) Under a constitution providing that until the General Assembly shall establish courts of chancery the circuit courts shall have jurisdiction in matters of equity, exercise of the power of the legislature in establishing separate chancery

tation of jurisdiction will not be held to result from the terms of a statute unless such limitation is expressed, or unless it arises from a necessary implication.⁶⁴ The giving of additional jurisdiction to other courts has been held not to take general jurisdiction thereof away from a constitutional court of general jurisdiction,⁶⁵ but it has also been held that a statute conferring special jurisdiction on another court deprives a court of general jurisdiction of its jurisdiction over such subject matter.⁶⁶ Where a court is created to exercise the jurisdiction of other courts, it assumes the same characteristics as respects to whether it exercises essentially state or county functions.⁶⁷ Where the establishment or disestablishment of courts of inferior jurisdiction by special legislation rests in the discretion of the legislature, such legislation will not be reviewed by the courts.⁶⁸

With respect to time. The time when an exercise of the power to create, abolish, consolidate, or transfer of the jurisdiction of a court shall go into effect depends on the intent expressed in the constitutional or statutory provision in question;⁶⁹ and where the time therefor is fixed by the constitution, it is incompetent for the legislature to fix some other time.⁷⁰ The effect generally of specifying a time certain in the law creating, continuing, or abolishing a court is to fix a period governing the jurisdiction of the new, the continued, or the old court;⁷¹ but where a court is established and the time of holding the first term specified, the court comes into existence for the purpose of filing papers, although the time for holding the term has not yet arrived.⁷² Where a constitution abolishes a court "from" a day certain, that day is excluded and a judgment of such court rendered on such day is valid.⁷³ Where the statute is silent as to the time of expiration of a court, it remains in existence to superintend the execution of a judgment in a habeas corpus case, and there is still a tribunal to be reached by certiorari.⁷⁴ Where a statute abolished an old court and created a new one to come into existence at a time fixed in the future, but before such time arrived a new constitution was adopted which continued the old court in existence until after the time fixed by statute for its going out of existence, it was held that the statute never went into effect and the new court created thereby never came into existence.⁷⁵

A statute cannot operate retroactively so as lawfully to create and establish a court from a date anterior to the adoption of the enactment.⁷⁶

Creation or continuation. Whether a new court is created or an established court continued depends on the intent expressed in, or lawfully implied from, courts swept away the circuit courts' jurisdiction in matters exclusively cognizable in courts of equity.—Monette Road Improvement Dist. of Dudley, Ark., 222 S.W. 59.

Where jurisdiction cannot be taken away directly, it cannot, of course, be taken away indirectly or by implication.—State v. Superior Court of Dane County, 175 N.W. 927, 170 Wis. 385.

Refusal to act

A court is not divested of all jurisdiction immediately after the date of a constitutional amendment by which it is abolished, where it is the evident intent thereof that such tribunal should remain in existence with jurisdiction over specified subjects until a certain subsequent date.—Brandon v. Bingaman, 39 Miss. 505—15 C.J. p 865 note 75.

Existing courts

Where a statute is evidently intended to govern as to certain courts then existing, it will be so construed, even though the enactment is, by its terms, not to take effect until a stated time in the future.—Milner v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 42 N.W. 567, 77 Iowa 755.

enter on his duties.—Gillis v. Barnett, 38 Cal. 393—15 C.J. p 865 note 77.

the constitutional or statutory provision in question.⁷⁷ Even though the jurisdiction is somewhat different, a court may nevertheless be a continuation of an established court.⁷⁸ The mere addition of certain duties to those of the members of a court already existing is not a creation of a new court,⁷⁹ nor is a new court created by merely dividing the territorial jurisdiction of an established court, where no provision of the constitution imposes any limitation on the legislative power with respect to making such division or appointing a place in each division for holding the court.⁸⁰

77. Addition of new judge

(1) A new judge may be added by statute to an existing court without thereby creating a new court or constituting a legislative attempt to make the judges of an existing court judges of a new court.—Ex parte Lloyd, 20 P. 872, 78 Cal. 421.

(2) Where it is evident from the language of a new constitution that a new tribunal was not created, even though an additional judge was added, and that such court was not to be continued as before until the general assembly should elect an additional associate justice, it will be so construed.—Middleton v. Taber, 24 S.E. 282, 46 S.C. 337—Land Mortg. Inv., etc., Co. v. Faulkner, 23 S.E. 516, 24 S.E. 288, 45 S.C. 503.

§ 135. Transfer of Causes of Action and Jurisdiction

If such is the intent of the law, causes of action may and will be transferred from the original to the new or superseding court. The new court has such powers and jurisdiction as is vested in it by law.

In the absence of constitutional restriction,⁸¹ causes of action may and will be transferred where they come within the terms of a constitution or statute providing therefor.⁸² Indeed, unless a contrary intent is expressed in the constitutional or statutory provision,⁸³ causes pending in abolished courts have been held to be transferred by operation of law to the new courts;⁸⁴ without the necessity for any certificate⁸⁵ or order transferring them.⁸⁶ A trans-troverly is situated in the new county, does not divest the jurisdiction of the courts of the old county until the conditions of transfer are fulfilled.—Sanford v. Ainsa, 33 S.Ct. 704, 228 U.S. 705, 57 L.Ed. 1033, affirming 114 P. 560, 13 Ariz. 287.

Matters included

A motion in the case is included when jurisdiction is legally transferred.

Ala.—Kavanaugh v. State Bank, 21 Ala. 564.

Cal.—Chipman v. Bowman, 14 Cal. 157.

Validity of statute

A statute transferring certain cases from one court to another does not violate a constitutional provision vesting in the court the power to change the venue.—Armstrong v. Emmet, 41 S.W. 87, 16 Tex.Civ.App. 242.

83. Motion for transfer

Where a statute so requires, a motion for a transfer must be filed before the case is set for trial.—State v. Oklahoma County Super. Ct., 136 P. 424, 40 Okl. 120.

Jurisdiction to issue process

Where a suit was pending in one court at the time of the enactment of a law organizing a new court which would have jurisdiction of the case, the jurisdiction of the old court over the action, to issue process therein, was held to be continued until an order was made therein transferring the case to the new court.—*Stone v. fer of the authority of one court to another will not revoke the authority given to a committee by the first court.⁸⁷

Appeals. While the abolition of an inferior court may abridge the appellate jurisdiction theretofore possessed by another court over its judgments,⁸⁸ it does not have such effect as to cases pending on appeal at the time of abolition.⁸⁹ Where a new appellate district is created, or where there has been a redistricting of existing appellate districts, pending appeals will be transferred to the appellate court having jurisdiction thereof when a statute⁹⁰ or valid order of the supreme court⁹¹ so provides; but in the absence of such a statute or order, appeals which have been perfected prior to the effective date of the statute will not be transferred to the court having jurisdiction under the new statute.⁹² Where a statute provided that all causes pending in the court when the act took effect should be transferred to another court and be triable there, a cause originally tried in the former court, which, when the act took effect, was awaiting determination on appeal, was, when the appeal was dismissed, within the jurisdiction of the latter court.⁹³

Authority of new or superseding court. The authority or jurisdiction of the new or superseding court depends, of course, on that vested in it by the constitutional or statutory provision in question.⁹⁴ Accordingly, it may be vested with the powers and jurisdiction formerly resting in the old or superseded court,⁹⁵ as well as the jurisdiction formerly possessed by itself, if it was already an existing court.⁹⁶ If such is the intent of the law, the new court will obtain and may proceed to exercise jurisdiction over causes lawfully transferred to it.⁹⁷

First Baptist Church, 35 A. 907, 59 N.J.Law 311.

95. Abolition of distinction between law and equity

Clark v. Adel, 220 N.Y.S. 696, 129 Misc. 82.

Removal from county

A statute providing for transfer on organization of new county, of suits pending in county or city courts of old county to superior court of new county, was inapplicable to suit filed in city court of old county against defendant who had

On the other hand, the new or superseding court will not, as a general rule, review the judgments and decrees rendered in the original court for alleged error committed prior to the organization of the new court.⁹⁸ It has been held that, where an appeal is lost by reason of the abolition of a court and the transfer of its business, the new court cannot set aside a verdict and grant a new trial;⁹⁹ and that, where an action was not pending in a court at the time of the taking effect of a constitutional provision abolishing such court and vesting another court with jurisdiction of all actions and proceedings pending therein, the superseding court had no power to order exceptions taken in the former court to be heard in the first instance by the superseding court.¹ A statute conferring jurisdiction has been held not to operate to give jurisdiction over causes of action arising before the passage of the act.²

Authority of old or superseded court. In the absence of a clearly expressed intention, a statute depriving a court of jurisdiction does not operate retrospectively to suspend pending proceedings,³ and if the statute is not imperative in requiring the transfer of all causes, the original court may continue to exercise jurisdiction over an action commenced therein.⁴ On the other hand, a court may not entertain proceedings over which its jurisdiction has been terminated,⁵ and where the jurisdiction of the old or superseded court has been completely terminated, pending cases should be transferred to the new court.⁶ Where the court is not abolished but is deprived of jurisdiction over certain matters, the power to enforce the decrees already entered continues in the original court,⁷ and the mere fact that the power of a court to deal with certain questions has been terminated does not deprive it of jurisdiction to set aside a former erroneous decree as to such matters.⁸ A division of a county or a judicial district will not oust jurisdiction which has already attached,⁹ unless express prohibitory words are used in the statute,¹⁰ or where there is a saving clause;¹¹ and a judge who has tried a cause may make and file a decision after the county is attached to another district, even though he is not a judge thereof.¹²

Practice, procedure, process, and defenses. If a court under a new constitution is a continuation of an established one, and no change is made in the practice or procedure therein, the former laws regulating the practice of the old courts will be in force;¹³ and where the constitution provides for a transfer of causes to the superseding court to be proceeded with as though the old courts had not moved from such county after institution of suit but before organization of new county, notwithstanding return of such defendant after creation of new county, and the suit was not transferable either at time of creation of new county or at time of his return. In any event, the right to transfer of suit was waived by trial of case twice in original county without objection of either party.—Subers v. Hirschensohn, 127 S.E. 825, 33 Ga.App. 752.

been abolished, the legislature has the right to provide for and regulate the modes of procedure therein, and to prescribe what proceedings in regard thereto should be taken by the court and the parties in the specified cases.¹⁴ The mode of procedure of an abolished court, however, is not transferred to another court which has an established mode of procedure of its own, merely because cases in the abolished court are transferred;¹⁵ and the law of the court to which a suit is transferred, under a statute providing for such removal, regulates the practice.¹⁶ A writ cannot be issued from a court not in existence, as where the statute appointing the court has not taken effect,¹⁷ although process may be regular notwithstanding the fact that on the day of its issuance no judges were commissioned.¹⁸ The filing of the record in the appellate court where the case is pending has been held to be proper, notwithstanding that prior to such filing a new appellate court having jurisdiction had been created by statute.¹⁹ As to defenses, it is a general rule that such as were available in the old court may be relied on in the new where a cause of action has been lawfully transferred.²⁰

§ 136. Judicial Departments, Circuits, and Districts

Where authorized to do so, the legislature may create, change, or increase or decrease the number of judicial circuits or districts, but in exercising such power the legislature must be governed by constitutional requirements.

The state constitutions usually divide the state into judicial departments, circuits, or districts,²¹ or give to the legislature the power to make such a division.²² Where the constitution expressly or by necessary implication so permits, the legislature may change judicial districts or circuits,²³ may detach and attach counties and districts,²⁴ and increase²⁵ or diminish²⁶ the number thereof from time to time

Judicial district defined

(1) By "judicial district" is meant a political and convenient arrangement for electing district court judges and designating their territorial jurisdiction. — Consolidated Flour Mills Co. v. Muegge, 260 P. 745, 127 Okl. 295, reversed on other grounds 49 S.Ct. 17, 278 U.S. 559, 73 L.Ed. 505.

Effect of change

(1) Under some laws district courts exist as district courts of a particular county, and not as district courts of a particular judicial district; and where by a statute a county is detached from one judicial district and attached to another, the terms of court are not changed by law.—Consolidated Flour Mills Co. v. Muegge, 260 P. 745, 127 Okl. 295, reversed on other grounds 49 S.Ct. 17, 278 U.S. 559, 73 L.Ed. 505—Ex parte Worley, 66 P.2d 107, 60 Okl.Cr. 384.

(2) It has also been held that the placing of the court in a new judicial district does not affect pending cases.—Paddy v. State, 49 S.W.2d 745, 120 Tex.Cr. 565.

(3) Accordingly, the transfer by law of a county from one judicial circuit to another does not affect the validity of judgments obtained in the county or proceedings thereon.—Sendoya v. Chattanooga Brewing Co., 74 So. 801, 73 Fla. 648.

Entire state one district

Statute held not to have made entire state one judicial district in which any and all circuit judges might be said to sit regularly in any and all circuits.—Lamb v. Board of Auditors of Wayne County, 209 N.W. 195, 235 Mich. 95.

Municipal court

Under Kansas City Charter, art 4 §§ 8, 10, common council had right, not only to fix boundary line of divisions of municipal court in ordinance creating them, but to change them from time to time, even during term for which judge had been elected and was serving.—State ex rel. Russell v. Gardner, 265 S.W. 986, 218 Mo.App. 217.

Power not restricted

(1) Provision of constitution that judges may or shall hold court for each other does not restrict power of legislature to change boundaries of districts.—Brown v. Clark, 34 P.2d 17, 47 Wyo. 216.

(2) Other provisions not restricting power see 15 C.J. p 868 note 33 [a].

Construction of amendment

Constitutional amendment relating to reapportionment and reduction of judicial circuits and circuit judges did not work any changes in circuit as may be deemed necessary and proper. On the other hand, in the absence of constitutional authorization, the legislature has no power either to create or abolish judicial circuits as established or permitted to be established under the constitution.²⁷

In exercising the power to create or change judicial districts, the legislature must, of course, be governed by constitutional requirements,²⁸ such as to population,²⁹ equality of population,³⁰ territory,³¹ and number³² of districts, contiguity of counties in the same district,³³ and compactness of geographical form of districts,³⁴ and the business involved in courts system, except such as might be necessarily implied for accomplishment of reapportionment and reduction, and did not repeal or amend constitutional provisions relating to judiciary.—State ex rel. Landis v. Thompson, 163 So. 270, 120 Fla. 860.

Holding of election

A constitutional provision that "Nor shall the boundary of any judicial district in a county be changed, unless, at an election held for that purpose, two-thirds of those voting assent thereto" is inapplicable to the abolition of a line and a merger of districts. Statute held to authorize submission to voters of question whether line between judicial districts should be abolished.—Mulliner v. Bouldin, 131 So. 364, 159 Miss. 212.

Provision "until otherwise provided by law," as used in constitution respecting judicial districts, authorizes legislature to reduce number of judicial districts.—Brown v. Clark, 34 P.2d 17, 47 Wyo. 216.

Reapportionment

Under a constitutional provision requiring reapportionment and reduction of judicial circuits, judicial circuits which are unchanged remain in existence without being continued.—State ex rel. Landis v. Bird, 163 So. 248, 120 Fla. 780.

Statute held not to abolish judicial district.—Sibley v. Continental Supply Co., Tex.Civ.App., 290 S.W. 769, error denied 292 S.W. 155, 116 Tex. 403.

Reason for rule

Legislature enacting laws concerning circuit courts and circuit judges of general jurisdiction acts solely as agency of people under delegated authority which must be found in constitution, and not under its general power to legislate.—State ex rel. Landis v. Thompson, 163 So. 270, 120 Fla. 860.

Constitutional qualifications held applicable to creation of additional districts, and not applicable solely to first division of state by legislature.—Willis v. Jonson, 121 S.W.2d 904, 275 Ky. 538.

Mere surplusage in act which violates constitutional requirements may be disregarded.—State ex rel. Landis v. Thompson, 163 So. 270, 120 Fla. 860.

Constitutional provisions in pari materia should be read together in determining limitations on legislature's power over judicial districts.—Howard v. Ferguson, 180 S.E. 529, 116 W.Va. 362.

Statutes held not violative of requirement

(1) That right of appeal be preserved.—Bonner v. Jackson, 251 S.W. 1, 158 Ark. 526.

(2) That legislature pass a "suitable law" for reduction of number of circuits.—State ex rel. Landis v. Thompson, 163 So. 270, 120 Fla. 860.

15 C.J. p 869 note 37.

Accessibility and convenience

Under constitutional provision concerning the creation of judicial districts, the elements of accessibility and convenience were a primary consideration of framers of constitution in providing that due regard should be given the territory affected.—Willis v. Jonson, 130 S.W.2d 828, 279 Ky. 416.

District divided by rivers

As regards constitutionality of act creating new judicial district, the general assembly failed to act with due regard to territory involved as required by constitution, where the new judicial district created by legislature was located on both sides of rivers which traversed its territory from end to end, and which could not be crossed during times of high water because there were no bridges, and new district was much larger than any of the old districts, and was almost twice as large as the other districts involved after the creation of the new district.—Willis v. Jonson, 121 S.W.2d 904, 275 Ky. 538.

Single county as district

(1) Where the constitution so permits, a county of a certain population may alone constitute a judicial circuit or district.

Ala.—State v. Black, 74 So. 387, 199 Ala. 321.

S.C.—State v. Cooler, 98 S.E. 845, 112 S.C. 95—State v. Mappus, 92 S.E. 1053, 107 S.C. 345.

(2) Where the constitutional provision also requires that a city of a certain population be in the county, it refers to a city having that number of bona fide residents within its corporate limits.—Nolan v. Jones, 284 S.W. 1054, 215 Ky. 288.

Division of county

(1) Some constitutions contemplate no such thing as a judicial circuit to be composed of a mere subdivision of a county; a county as a whole being the minimum territorial limit of a circuit, and then only when having a certain population and property valuation.—In re Opinions of the Justices, 117 So. 50, 217 Ala. 602.

(2) It has also been held that a portion of a county, not constituting either a city or village, cannot be severed for local judicial purposes from the rest, leaving it a unit for all other purposes of civil government.—People ex rel. Townsend v. Porter, 90 N.Y. 68—People v. Boice, 118 N.Y.S. 500, 63 Misc. 357.

(3) On the other hand, in the absence of constitutional restriction, the legislature may divide a county into judicial districts, and define the power and jurisdiction of the courts therein situated.

the districts.³⁵ So, also, where the constitution permits this power to be exercised at certain times only, such limitation is binding.³⁶ Where a discretion is delegated to the legislature in these respects, if it acts within the constitutional restrictions on the exercise of such power,³⁷ its exercise will not be reviewed by the courts unless it appears that there was a gross abuse of discretion.³⁸

The division of a single county attached to an existing judicial district into two counties will, unless otherwise provided, leave both counties within the same district.³⁹ Where the statute so provides, the courts of one district will not have jurisdiction over matters arising in, or persons residing in, other districts, even though both districts are wholly in one county.⁴⁰

Authority of court

In suit attacking validity of statute creating a new judicial district, the authority of the courts was to determine whether there was any evidence to support legislative conclusion that a new district was necessary or to show that legislature had due regard for the factual conditions viewed as a whole; the courts cannot treat the factors of territory, business, and population separately.—Willis v. Jonson, 130 S.W.2d 828, 279 Ky. 416.

Presumption in favor of act

In suit challenging validity of statute creating a new judicial district, the determination of the legislature would be presumed to have been supported by facts known to it, unless facts judicially known or proved precluded such possibility.—Willis v. Jonson, 130 S.W.2d 828, 279 Ky. 416.

Jurisdiction over particular proceedings

(1) A constitutional provision which confers jurisdiction over certain matters on the superior courts does not confer on each of such courts concurrent jurisdiction of such matters coextensive with the state so as to prevent the legislature from designating particular proceedings which shall be exclusively within the jurisdiction of one of such courts.—Elberta Oil Co. v. Superior Court of California in and for Kings County, 239 P. 415, 74 Cal.App. 114.

(2) Thus, a constitutional provision conferring jurisdiction in all matters of probate on the superior court does not mean that the superior courts in the state have concurrent jurisdiction in every particular probate matter, but the legislature has the right to prescribe which

§ 137. Divisions and Parts of Courts

A court which is divided into divisions or departments remains a unit notwithstanding; actions brought in any of the departments are in effect in the same court, and decisions and judgments therein are rendered by the same tribunal. The department to which a case is assigned has exclusive jurisdiction of it unless or until the case is transferred or reassigned to another department.

It frequently happens that a court is divided into a number of different departments, parts, or divisions,⁴¹ and the legislature has power so to regulate the business of a court in the absence of any constitutional prohibition,⁴² but the creation of divisions by a court in contravention of constitutional or statutory provisions is invalid.⁴³ Cases are assigned to the various divisions or departments as provided by statute or rule of court,⁴⁴ and a litigant court shall exercise jurisdiction of the particular estate.—Duncan v. Fresno County Super. Ct., 84 P. 767, 149 Cal. 98, 117 Am.S.R. 119.

Alabama statute not repealed by amendment

Local Acts 1919 p 12, amending Acts 1909 p 14, which provided for a branch of the circuit court of Marshall county at Albertville does not repeal it, and the court still remains as a branch of the circuit court of Marshall county, and the old court is not abolished.—*Lang v. Necessity for assignment

In accordance with statute or rule of court, a division has no authority to hear a case until it has been assigned to it.—Hallinan v. Superior Court in and for City and County of San Francisco, 81 P.2d 254, 27 Cal. App.2d 433.

has no inherent right to have a case tried by a particular division or judge.⁴⁵ Cases of a particular nature should be assigned to the department designated by statute or rule of court for that type of case,⁴⁶ but jurisdiction is not dependent on a proper assignment and an irregularity in an assignment presents no question of jurisdiction in the ordinary sense of the term,⁴⁷ and the irregularity is waived or cured by the absence of a timely objection thereto.⁴⁸ An assignment of the first of several identical suits will carry all the others to the same division of the court.⁴⁹ In the absence of any rules of court, after business had been distributed among different departments by an order of court concurred in by all the judges, the order should be held binding until revoked or modified by the same authority.⁵⁰

The court remains a unit notwithstanding such a division;⁵¹ and where the constitution vests the power in the court and not in departments, which are merely for convenience, the judges hold but one and the same court whether sitting separately or together.⁵² Actions brought in any of such departments are in effect in the same court, and decisions and judgments therein are rendered by the same tribunal,⁵³ although where a case is assigned or al-

Under rule of court, cases growing out of other suits or proceedings previously pending or involving a common fund shall follow the assignment of the original suit or go to the division first acquiring jurisdiction of the fund.—Merrick v. Southern Publishing Co., 75 So. 74, 141 La. 342.

Assignment on subsequent appeal

A cause which has previously been in the appellate court is on a subsequent appeal assigned to that branch which decided it on prior review; but, if through inadvertence it is assigned to another branch, the assignment is, with the consent of that branch, vacated.—Tarallo v. Construction of statute as directory

Statute providing that injunction to restrain state officers from performing duty shall be granted only by supreme court at term sitting in department in which officer or board is located, or duty is required to be performed, although mandatory in form, must be construed as directory, otherwise it would be unconstitutional as restraint on chancery jurisdiction of some justices of supreme court, while conferring it on others.—*Dairy Sealed v. (1) Where a division has never properly acquired jurisdiction over a cause, further proceedings in the cause may be commenced in another division.—Riggs v. Moise, Mo., 128 S.W.2d 632.

(2) Thus, where a testamentary trustee made application to resign without giving notice to beneficiaries whose consent was not obtained, division of court to which application was submitted had no jurisdiction, the resignation was a nullity, and the appointment of a successor was void, so that another division of the court, to which, after trustee's death, a subsequent petition was assigned, had jurisdiction to appoint a succeeding trustee.—Riggs v. Moise, supra.

Request for trial by another judge

Questions arising pending reassignment

If party to action, which has been regularly assigned to department of superior court, is of opinion that some question in connection with action should be presented to judge presiding over another department, application should be made for reassignment of action, and, until such reassignment be ordered, in absence of an emergency, questions concerning action should be presented to judge before whom action is pending or to presiding judge himself.—*State ex rel. § 138. Change in Name of Court

A change of the name of a court does not change the court where the clear constitutional purpose is to the contrary, nor does it affect past or pending proceedings.

Courts may be continued under another name;⁷⁸ and a change of the name of a court does not change the court, where the clear constitutional purpose is to the contrary,⁷⁹ nor has it any effect on either past or pending proceedings therein.⁸⁰

§ 139. Judges

A court cannot exist without a judge, and the power to create a court embraces the power to create the office of judge thereof.

A court cannot be established until it has a judge, and unless the things required by the constitution for the existence of a court concur the court cannot exist.⁸¹ The power to create a court ordinarily implies the power to create the office of judge thereof and to confer jurisdiction.⁸²

B. MINISTERIAL OFFICERS, ATTENDANTS, AND ASSISTANTS

§ 140. In General

- a. Appointment and supervision in general
- b. Bond
- c. Tenure and abolition of office
- d. Duties
- e. Compensation

a. Appointment and Supervision in General

Ministerial officers may be provided for the courts and such officers are subject to their supervision.

The legislative authority may provide for court officers with power to perform ministerial duties necessary in the administration of the law;⁸³ and the power to appoint such officers, within such limitations as are prescribed by statute, may be expressly or impliedly delegated to the courts.⁸⁴ In addition, in the absence of contrary legislation courts have inherent power to provide themselves with appropriate instruments required for the performance of their duties, including authority to appoint persons to aid the court in the performance of special administrative or judicial duties.⁸⁵ The exercise of such jurisdiction depends on the sound discretion of the trial judge,⁸⁶ and, it has been held, there can be no agent of a court unless there is an appointment by, or subjection to the discretion of, the court;⁸⁷

Approval of appointments

The appointment of certain court officials by the judge is invalid where such appointments are not approved by the budget director as required by law, since the requirement of such approval is a reasonable restriction on the power of selection and appointment, and even judicial officers may not ignore reasonable budgetary restrictions.—Daly v. McGoldrick, 20 N.E.2d 545, 280 N.Y. 210, affirming 8 N.Y.S.2d 495, 255 App.Div. 594.

Appointment as affecting right to judicial hearings

That courts may appoint such ministerial officers as auditors, investigators, and examiners to aid them does not affect the parties' rights to judicial hearings, inasmuch as the reports of investigators and examiners are for the benefit of all parties and the makers thereof may be cross-examined.—In re Utilities Power & Light Corporation, C.C.A.Ill., 90 F.2d 798.

86. U.S.—In re Utilities Power & Light Corporation, supra.

but such ministerial officers are in nowise necessary to the existence of a court.⁸⁸

As a general rule the conduct of the court's ministerial officers and others connected with its judicial proceedings is always subject to the control and discipline of the court.⁸⁹ Thus the court may give summary relief against its officers,⁹⁰ as, for example, by requiring them to return money, books, papers, or other property to a person from whom it was unlawfully taken, or which the officers have no equitable right to retain,⁹¹ even though the officer's term may already have expired.⁹² Furthermore, the court may call on its officers to make correct and proper return of process.⁹³ However, an appellate court has been held to be without power to coerce the officers of lower courts in the performance of duties owed to such lower courts and not to the appellate court.⁹⁴

b. Bond

Statutes requiring a court officer to give bond must be substantially complied with.

Where required by statute, a court officer must give a legally sufficient bond, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties, and approved by the proper administrative body.⁹⁵ Such body, however, is bound to approve the bond if it contains proper sureties, is drawn in proper form, and furnishes sufficient security;⁹⁶ immaterial variances or omissions from the precise statutory form are not sufficient to render it invalid or ineffective.⁹⁷

c. Tenure and Abolition of Office

The term of office of a court officer ceases on the repeal of the law authorizing his appointment and on the abolition of the court, but it survives the resignation of the judge.

If the law under which the appointment of a court officer was made is repealed, the appointment ceases;⁹⁸ and where, by legislative action, the court is abolished, the terms of its officers are thereby ended.⁹⁹ One not validly appointed to a position as court officer is not entitled to contest a purported abolition of such office.¹

The resignation of a judge does not arrest ministerial proceedings of subordinate court officers, and such officers may continue to perform their legal duties until a successor is appointed.²

d. Duties

Ministerial court officers ordinarily must attend personally to their duties, and should be disinterested as between litigants.

Although there may be a substitution of officers,³ ministerial court officers are generally required to give personal attention to the duties of their offices;⁴ and, as between litigants, they should maintain a disinterested attitude.⁵

e. Compensation

The compensation of ministerial officers of a court may be regulated by statute.

Where the legislature has the power to create a particular court, it possesses the power to provide who shall pay the employees and the amount to be paid.⁶ Where so provided by statute, the sole pow-

§ 141. Interpreters

- a. Appointment in general
- b. Qualifications
- c. Compensation
- d. Removal

a. Appointment in General

Courts may appoint interpreters in proper cases; and in some jurisdictions they are regarded as court officers.

Where so provided by statute, an interpreter may be appointed for designated courts or purposes;¹¹ and even in the absence of express authority it is the right and duty of courts to employ and swear interpreters of foreign languages in cases where the necessity therefor arises.¹²

Status. While it has been stated that an interpreter is more than a mere witness and is, in a sense, an officer of the court,¹³ it has also been held that he is not a court officer, but is merely an attendant.¹⁴

b. Qualifications

An interpreter must be qualified, competent and, whenever possible, should be disinterested; and whether a person sufficiently meets the requirements is determined by the court.

An interpreter must be qualified and competent to perform the duty assumed,¹⁵ and, whenever possible, he should be entirely disinterested.¹⁶

The question of whether a particular person is sufficiently qualified, competent, or disinterested to act as interpreter is, generally speaking, a matter within the discretion of the trial court,¹⁷ and in the absence of abuse the exercise of such discretion ordinarily will not be reviewed.¹⁸ cases, he need not necessarily be unbiased,¹⁹ the selection of an interested person as an interpreter is at least improper,²⁰ and may constitute fatal error.²¹

It is not in every case, however, that an interested person must be rejected.²² For example, an interested person may be accepted where no other person is available who can adequately interpret for the witness.²³ Furthermore, an interpreter has been held not to be disqualified or rendered incompetent merely because he is interested in the outcome of the particular suit or prosecution;²⁴ or because he is related to a party or a witness in the proceeding;²⁵ or has had friendly relations with the parties;²⁶ or because he has been subpoenaed as a witness,²⁷ has listened to the testimony of other witnesses in the case,²⁸ or has, himself, testified or will testify;²⁹ or because, in a criminal case, he is a member of the police force.³⁰

Examination or inquiry as to competency as translator. While, as is stated above in this subdivision of this section, the question of the qualification and competency of an interpreter is a matter within the discretion of the court, and, as is noted in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 965, also 16 C.J. p 809 note 48 and in the C.J.S. title Witnesses § 326, also 70 C.J. p 495 note 81, the accuracy of an interpreter's translation is ultimately a question of fact for the jury, nevertheless, the qualifications of an interpreter as a translator are subject to a proper inquiry.³¹ Thus his competency may be attacked by direct or cross examination, or by independent testimony,³² and when attacked it may be reestablished by further examination or by independent evidence.³³ An interpreter may not, however, prove his competency as a translator merely by his own affidavit,³⁴ or by the opinion of a witness familiar with the foreign language;³⁵ and the court may properly refuse to permit an interpreter to demonstrate his skill by carrying on a conversation with various witnesses in a foreign tongue.³⁶

Time for determining. The competency of an interpreter should be determined prior to the time when he enters on the discharge of his duties.³⁷

c. Compensation

An interpreter, properly appointed and qualified, is entitled to such compensation as is fixed by law.

Where the compensation of an interpreter is regulated by statute, he is entitled to receive only the amount fixed,³⁸ and the court cannot make an additional allowance.³⁹

An interpreter who has not been properly appointed to, or who has not qualified for, the position is not entitled to receive the statutory compensation.⁴⁰ Furthermore, an interpreter cannot recover salary when he was so far unqualified as to be chargeable with fraud in accepting the office.⁴¹

A county may not be held liable for an interpreter's fees unless his services were rendered in the prosecution or defense of a criminal case or in a civil case to which the county was a party.⁴²

§ 142. Court Attendants and Assistants

- a. In general
- b. Eligibility
- c. Appointment and qualification
- d. Tenure and removal
- e. Authority, duties, and liability
- f. Compensation

a. In General

Court attendants are essential to the administration of business of a court, but they are regarded ordinarily as employees rather than as officers.

Court attendants are a necessary adjunct to the due and orderly administration of the business of a court.⁴⁴

Status. Court attendants have, in general, and for various purposes, been held not to be officers,⁴⁵ county officers,⁴⁶ public officers,⁴⁷ or constitutional officers,⁴⁸ but are ordinarily considered to be mere employees,⁴⁹ or attachés;⁵⁰ although in the federal courts certain attendants have been held to be officers of the court.⁵¹

Whether a particular county employee attending court has the status of a "court attendant" within the meaning of a statute providing for such an official, depends, it has been held, on his appointment and the nature of the duties for which he has been appointed;⁵² and where the evidence as to his status is conflicting the question is properly submitted to the jury.⁵³

b. Eligibility

Court attendants and assistants must possess the qualifications required by law.

To be eligible for appointment as a court attendant or assistant, the applicant or appointee must possess the qualifications required by statute.⁵⁴ For instance, the applicant must comply with statutes requiring court attendants to be residents of the municipality or local subdivision within which their functions are to be exercised.⁵⁵

In the absence of constitutional restrictions, it is

Kern*, 10 N.Y.S.2d 73, 170 Misc. 281.

As condition for continuance in office

The requirement of the New York charter that designated court attendant shall reside in borough in which district for which he was appointed is situated is not condition of eligibility for examination but condition and qualification for continuance in office after appointment since one cannot become an "employee" until he has been appointed.—Marcellus v. Kern, supra.

within the power of the legislature to place particular court officials and attendants in the unclassified service outside of the eligibility provisions of the civil service laws.⁵⁶ However, where applicable, civil service statutes and rules respecting the appointment of court attendants and employees must be given effect.⁵⁷

c. Appointment and Qualification

Unless deprived of the power by statute, courts ordinarily may appoint the necessary attendants and assistants. In the absence of statute, an attendant need not give bond.

Where authorized by statute, courts may appoint court attendants or assistants.⁵⁸ Such statutes have been held valid,⁵⁹ and preclude the appointment of court attendants by other officials.⁶⁰ However, where no particular form of appointment is prescribed by the statute, the court may accept an appointment made by another official.⁶¹

Apart from statute, a court of general jurisdiction, of record, or of last resort, possesses the inherent power to provide the necessary attendants and assistants as a means of conducting its business with reasonable despatch, or to provide for assistants charged with the care of its rooms or other like functions, and the court itself may determine the necessity.⁶² An inferior court cannot, however, make an appointment contrary to statutory intent.⁶³

Where a statute vests the appointive power in an official other than the judge, such enactment controls.⁶⁴ However, under particular statutory regulations the court may have the power to recommend a person for the appointment,⁶⁵ or may de-

65. Necessity of repeated recommendations

Judges authorized to recommend court attendants for appointment by county officer need not recommend names to each incoming officer, but the latter must continue the attendants' names on pay roll until attend-termine the number of attendants,⁶⁶ or may require the appointment of as many as are necessary.⁶⁷ Moreover, a court may appoint attendants when a peculiar emergency demands, or where the agency vested by law with the power of appointment neglects or refuses to perform its duty;⁶⁸ although the right to appoint under such circumstances is only coextensive with the necessity and ceases with it.⁶⁹

The exercise of an appointing power is not subject to the control, dictation, or approval of a local administrative body or official, in the absence of a statute imposing such regulation;⁷⁰ and where the power of appointment has been lawfully exercised the court may not be compelled by mandamus to appoint another to the same office.⁷¹

Qualification. In the absence of statutory requirement, a court attendant need not give bond to the appointing official.⁷²

d. Tenure and Removal

Unless otherwise regulated by statute, the power to remove a court attendant is lodged with the appointing authority.

In the absence of statutory regulations, the power to remove a court attendant follows and abides with the power of appointment.⁷³ Thus, where the power of appointment is exercised by the court, it has the power of removal.⁷⁴

Where statutes prescribe the body or official who may remove court attendants, such statutes control.⁷⁵ However, a power of removal may not be implied from a mere limited power of appointment to fill vacancies.⁷⁶ Civil service laws providing for the removal of court attendants and assistants must be given effect.⁷⁷

Where required by statute, an attendant is entitled to a hearing before removal.⁷⁸

Term of office. Where the term of office of a court attendant is regulated by statutory provisions, such regulations control.⁷⁹

Where an attendant is appointed pursuant to statutory authorization, and the statute is repealed by a subsequent enactment, the appointment of new attendants under the later act terminates the services of the attendant, although the subsequent appointments are not made to the full number authorized.⁸⁰ However, the transfer by legislative action of the appointing power to another body or official does not remove the attendant where the body or official fails to make new appointments.⁸¹

e. Authority, Duties, and Liability

The duties of a court attendant are those pertaining to the character of the office and which are prescribed by law. An attendant may be civilly liable for his wrongful acts or omissions.

character of the office itself, and the necessity upon which rests their appointment, and such as are specifically provided by law,⁸² although it has been held that the duties of an attendant may be founded on ancient practice sanctioned by laws impliedly recognizing the same.⁸³

Attendants and assistants must act in accordance with the judge's direction,⁸⁴ regardless of the instructions of any other person.⁸⁵

Liability. A court attendant may be held accountable in a civil suit for damages resulting from negligence in the performance of his legal duties;⁸⁶ and a suit may be brought against a former attendant in his individual capacity after he has gone out of office.⁸⁷

f. Compensation

The compensation of court attendants is regulated by statute, by the court, or by other officials or bodies; and the amount fixed may not be changed contrary to statute. Acceptance of an amount less than the statutory allowance does not, in some states, foreclose recovery of the full compensation.

The right to, and the amount of, compensation of court attendants and assistants may be fixed by statute,⁸⁸ or it may be determinable by the court in the exercise of its inherent⁸⁹ or statutory⁹⁰ jurisdiction,

Limitation on exercise of power

The power of courts to fix salaries of their employees and assistants in administration of justice must be exercised not only with due regard to rates of pay for similar positions in other courts within city, but also with sympathetic appraisal of financial condition of city which pays the salaries.—Rosenthal v. McGoldrick, 5 N.Y.S.2d 531, 167 Misc. 673, reversed on other grounds 6 N.Y.S.2d 360, 254 App.Div. 859, affirmed 18 N.E.2d 315, 279 N.Y. 688, reargument denied 19 N.E.2d 660, 280 N.Y. 11.

Exclusion of county board's authority or by other public officers or bodies in the exercise of authority vested in them.⁹¹

A statute fixing the compensation of particular court attendants should be limited to such employees as are clearly included within its provisions;⁹² and where the compensation is fixed by statute a court attendant, whether de facto or de jure, coming within its terms, is entitled to recover at least the minimum amount specified therein.⁹³ However, where the right to compensation is dependent on statute, an attendant is not entitled to receive compensation not provided for by the statute, or to receive more than the amount fixed or determined by the statute;⁹⁴ and services required of him for which he is not specifically paid must be considered compensated for by the payment received for other services.⁹⁵

A court attendant whose appointment was unlawful has been held not entitled to recover compensation for his attendance;⁹⁶ but a de facto court attendant may recover compensation for his services,⁹⁷ and an attendant whose appointment was otherwise lawful is not barred from recovering compensation because of the fact that, prior to his appointment, the full number of officers and attendants allowed to the court had been appointed.⁹⁸

While under a statute so providing a court attendant is not entitled to receive compensation for services not actually rendered,⁹⁹ it has been held that, not only may an attendant wrongfully suspended from, and subsequently reinstated in, his position recover his compensation for the period of the suspension,¹ but that, where the compensation is an incident of his office, it is not subject to set-off for sums earned in other employment during such period.² Furthermore, the right to compensation of a court attendant, such as a bailiff or crier, has been held not to depend on the necessity of his

Necessity of approval by board

Where so provided by statute, the court's determination of the compensation of its assistants may be subject to the approval of the county board.—Board of Com'rs of Routt County v. Morning, 210 P. 326, 72 Colo. 200.

Necessity of notice to comptroller

An attendant of the supreme court may compel the comptroller to pay his salary at the increased rate fixed by resolution of court, although the comptroller was not personally notified of the increase, and the justices' notice of their resolution given to the board of estimate and apportionment was sufficient.—In re Flaherty, 171 N.Y.S. 624, 184 App.Div. 428, reversed on other grounds Flaherty v. Craig, 123 N.E. 157, 226 N.Y. 76.

When rate of compensation effective

A rate of compensation, when fixed, relates back to, and takes effect from, the beginning of the fiscal period for which such rate is established, rather than from the date on which the rate is actually fixed.—People ex rel. Pollastrini v. Whealan, 187 N.E. 491, 353 Ill. 500, reversing 269 Ill.App. 281.

92. "Chief court attendant" held not "attendant" within the meaning of a statute fixing and equalizing the compensation of "attendants" of a particular court.—Gannon v. McGoldrick, 7 N.Y.S.2d 11, 12, 169 Misc. 107, affirmed 7 N.Y.S.2d 13, 255 App.Div. 755.

Classification on pay roll

That employees are classified on the pay roll as "court attendants" does not alone establish their right to compensation as such, under a statute fixing the compensation of such "attendants," while the fact that they had previously not claimed the benefit of a prior statute fixing a smaller salary for such attendants is an indication that they did not consider themselves to be such "court attendants."—Sawyer v. Camden County, 4 A.2d 76, 122 N.J.Law 119.

93. Failure of city to fix salary services but his attendance at the proper time is all that is required.³

Mileage or traveling expenses are sometimes allowed to court attendants by statute,⁴ and a county board has no power to reduce or cancel the allowance fixed, or to make a binding contract eliminating such fees.⁵

Change of compensation. Where an attendant is appointed, and is removable at will, by the court, the court may increase or diminish his compensation at will.⁶ Where the court is authorized by statute to fix the compensation subject to approval by a board, the board may not reduce the compensation once it is fixed and approved.⁷

Where the statute so provides, the compensation of an attendant, when once fixed, may not be changed for a given year.⁸ Furthermore, where the minimum compensation for attendants is fixed by statute, it may not be reduced by the court⁹ or by a local administrative body,¹⁰ unless a reduction is authorized by the statute.¹¹ A statute authorizing a reduction of the compensation of certain court attendants does not affect the compensation of court attendants specifically exempted from the operation of the statute.¹²

Acceptance of less than legal compensation. According to some authorities the acceptance of an amount less than the statutory allowance does not preclude a court attendant from recovering the amount of compensation fixed by statute,¹³ at least in the absence of a binding agreement,¹⁴ or in the face of an acceptance under protest.¹⁵

On the other hand, it has also been held that the acceptance of a lesser amount estops an attendant from claiming the statutory allowance where he has failed to protest,¹⁶ or where he has agreed to accept the lesser sum,¹⁷ particularly where, although the agreement might not be binding, it has been fully performed.¹⁸

Public policy

"An agreement by a public officer to accept less than the fees or salary allowed him by law is contrary to public policy and void. . . . The compensation . . . is an incident of his office, and he is entitled to it, not by force of any contract, but because the law attaches it to the office."—MacNeill v. Steele, supra.

14. Pa.—Bettig v. Berks County, 26 Pa.Dist. 972.

15. Pa.—Bettig v. Berks County, supra.

Effect of charter regulation

The provision of Greater New York Charter § 149, that an officer's receipt in full payment upon the pay roll shall be deemed an accord and satisfaction has no application to the salary of a supreme court attendant, fixed by the court as a county charge, which the comptroller has no power to dispute.—In re Flaherty, 171 N.Y.S. 624, 184 App.Div. 428, reversed on other grounds Flaherty

v. Craig, 123 N.E. 157, 226 N.Y. 76.

16. Public policy

Waiver by court attendant of part of his statutory salary was not contrary to public policy, especially where he had accepted less than statutory salary on fifty-six successive occasions over period of two years and four months in full payment.—State ex rel. Hess v. City of Akron, 7 N.E.2d 411, 132 Ohio St. 305, affirming 10 N.E.2d 1, 56 Ohio App. 28.

17. Public policy

(1) "The public policy which prevents a public officer from agreeing to accept less than the compensation attached by law to his office . . . does not apply to a mere employee or attaché who may be appointed or discharged at will."—Werkman v. Westmoreland County, 194 A. 344, 346, 128 Pa.Super. 297.

(2) "An arrangement by which a municipal court attendant accepted less than his statutory salary did not violate public policy in view of provision making term of office dependent on pleasure of the appointing judges.—State ex rel. Hess v. City of Akron, 10 N.E.2d 1, 56 Ohio App. 28, affirmed 7 N.E.2d 411, 132 Ohio St. 305.

Consideration for agreement

The mutual promises of court attendants to accept less than the statutory salary was a "consideration" for the transaction; but even if there had been no consideration originally a change of position by the city paying the compensation in reliance on the promises would supply the "consideration" necessary to the validity of the agreement.—State ex rel. Hess v. City of Akron, supra.

§ 143. Probation Officers

- a. In general
- b. Appointment
- c. Duties and authority
- d. Compensation
- e. Tenure, removal, and retirement

a. In General

A probation officer is a local court assistant or officer, and, in some jurisdictions, is a county officer. A federal district probation officer's jurisdiction is limited to his own district.

A probation officer is a court assistant¹⁹ or officer,²⁰ who exercises judicial functions.²¹ Furthermore, he is regarded as a minor local officer.²² He is also a county officer in some states,²³ but not in others.²⁴

Jurisdiction. A federal probation officer, appointed for a particular district, has no jurisdiction to act in another district.²⁵

b. Appointment

Unless otherwise provided for by statutory or constitutional regulations, a probation officer, ordinarily is appointed by the court.

The appointment of a probation officer has been held to be a judicial function,²⁶ which may not be delegated to another official or body, such as a county board.²⁷ Hence, the appointment of a probation officer, usually under statutory authority, is ordinarily made by the court.²⁸ The delegation of such power to the court is proper.²⁹

Pursuant to constitutional authorization, the appointment may be made by the governor;³⁰ and, where so required by statute, an appointment must have the consent and approval of the county board,³¹ although the board's power therein does not extend to determining whether a necessity exists for such appointment.³²

Character and qualifications. The determination of the character and qualifications of a proposed appointee usually is a matter within the discretion of the appointing court;³³ but, under a statute requiring the consent and approval of the county board to an appointment, it is the office of such body to determine whether the proposed appointee is a person fit for the position.³⁴

The authority and duties of a probation officer are determined by statute or by the court. He has no general power of arrest.

The duties and authority of a probation officer are such as may be conferred on him by statute³⁵ or by the court appointing him.³⁶ It is his duty generally to assist the court;³⁷ to furnish to it such information as it may require,³⁸ and to make such investigations as may be necessary.³⁹

A probation officer has authority to make arrests only when such power is incidental or necessary to the performance of his duties.⁴⁰

d. Compensation

The compensation of probation officers ordinarily is fixed and paid according to statutory regulations.

Pursuant to statutory regulations the compensation of a probation officer is determined by the court,⁴¹ subject to the concurrence of the county board or equivalent municipal body,⁴² and is paid by the county.⁴³ Where the officer's salary has been fixed by the court within the limit set by statute, and has been approved by the county board, the board cannot thereafter reduce the salary,⁴⁴ at least during the period for which an appropriation has been made therefor.⁴⁵

The fixing of the compensation of a probation officer has, however, been held not to be a judicial function;⁴⁶ and, in some jurisdictions, the county board is empowered to fix the compensation;⁴⁷ but where the legislature is required by the constitution to fix the compensation of officers it may not delegate to a county board the power to fix the compensation of probation officers.⁴⁸

e. Tenure, Removal, and Retirement

Where a probation officer serves at the pleasure of the court he may be summarily removed. To secure retirement benefits statutory regulations must be complied with.

Where so provided by statute, the tenure of a probation officer is at the pleasure of the court.⁴⁹ Under such statutes the officer may be removed at will by the court without the preferment of charges or an opportunity to be heard.⁵⁰ Where the officers are appointed by the court, subject to removal in its discretion, the county board has no power to reduce the number of such officers.⁵¹

Where the manner of removal is regulated by statute, such statutes are to be complied with.⁵²

Retirement; benefits. On retirement a probation officer may, under statutes so providing, be entitled to retirement benefits.⁵³ Where, under such statutes, he has an option as to the manner in which such benefits are to be paid, he must exercise such option in proper form and time;⁵⁴ and, on his failure to do so, benefits are payable in the manner

Salary of subsequent appointees

(1) Establishment of salary for all probation officers appointed under statute providing therefor fixed salary for each appointee, and separate action as to salary in subsequent appointments was unnecessary.—McCourt v. City of Boston, supra.

(2) Where a salary is fixed for a particular appointee, rather than for any incumbent of the office, the fact that subsequent temporary appointees are paid at the same rate is not a binding recognition of such fixed salary for the office itself, since, to be construable as fixing a salary for the office rather than for an appointee, the county board's order must be clear; hence, when the board approves the salary of a subsequent permanent appointee for a lower amount than previously paid the incumbent, such appointee is entitled only to such lower amount.—Avery v. Deputy probation officer

Under Inferior Criminal Courts Act § 96, providing for the removal of "chief probation officer or any probation officer," a deputy chief probation officer of city magistrate's court of the city of New York may be removed at pleasure of the appointing power, the omission to specifically include deputy chief probation officers not indicating legislative intent to omit them or to design that method of their removal is under Greater New York Charter § 1543.—McKay v. C. DE FACTO AND UNAUTHORIZED OR ILLEGAL COURTS AND TRIBUNALS

§ 144. In General

If authorized by law, a court defectively organized or irregularly called is a de facto court and its acts are valid.

Where the organization or calling of a court is authorized by law, a court organized or called thereunder is at least a de facto court, although it is defectively organized or irregularly called.⁵⁷

While it has been held that, where a court has been established by an act of the legislature apparently valid, and has gone into operation under such act, it is to be regarded as a court de facto,⁵⁸ it has also been held that orders and decrees made by a person purporting to act as judge of a court organized under an unconstitutional statute are void.⁵⁹

If there is no law authorizing a certain court to be held, and a judge assumes to create a court and preside over it, the tribunal so created and all its proceedings will be void.⁶⁰

§ 145. Courts of De Facto Government

- a. In general
- b. Confederate courts

a. In General

Courts acting under de facto political authority have jurisdiction; a judgment of a foreign court in territory in de facto possession of a foreign government may validly affect private rights.

Courts acting under authority of the de facto rulers of a county for the time being have the jurisdiction of legitimate courts,⁶¹ and a judgment of a court of a foreign country, sitting in territory not yet surrendered by such foreign government, it being de facto in possession, is valid as to the rights of private persons affected thereby.⁶²

b. Confederate Courts

The national court of the Confederate States was a nullity, but acts of the state courts in the Confederacy have been held valid to the same extent as acts of foreign courts.

A national court organized under authority of the government of the Confederate States of America was a nullity and could exercise no rightful jurisdiction;⁶³ but it is well established as a general rule that the acts, decrees, and judgments of the courts of the states which formed part of the Confederacy, during the war, were valid and binding so far as they related merely to private rights and did not impair, or tend to impair, the supremacy of the national authority or the just rights of citizens under the federal constitution,⁶⁴ although their judgments

Theory underlying validity

The Confederate States "in most, if not in all, instances, merely transferred the existing State organizations to the support of a new and different national head. The same constitutions, the same laws for the protection of property and personal rights remained. . . . These laws . . . were the fundamental principles for which civil society is organized . . . and must be respected in their administration under whatever temporary dominant authority they may be exercised. It . . . [was] only when in the use of these powers substantial aid and comfort was given or intended to be given to the rebellion . . . that their acts . . . [were] void."

stand on no higher ground than acts and judgments of a foreign court, and can be impeached in the same manner.⁶⁵

It has been held, however, that the acts of such courts are void,⁶⁶ and in some states, by constitutional provision adopted during the Civil War, they were expressly declared void.⁶⁷

§ 146. Collateral Impeachment

The legality of the existence of a de facto court may be questioned only in a direct proceeding.

The legality of the existence of a de facto court and its right to exercise its functions may not be inquired into collaterally, but only in a direct proceeding at the instance of the state;⁶⁸ neither may the question of the legal existence of a trial court be raised by appeal.⁶⁹

IV. TERMS AND SESSIONS

§ 147. Definitions and Distinctions

A term of court is the period of time prescribed for holding court, while a session of court is the time during a term in which the court actually sits for the transaction of judicial business. A term is regular when it is held at a time and place fixed by law; and it is special when it is called by a judge or other authorized official, in his discretion, and is convened or held at a time fixed by him. An appearance term is one to which process is returnable; and a jury term is one at which a jury may be had.

A term of court is the time prescribed for holding court for the administration of judicial duties; a definite and fixed period, prescribed by law for the administration of judicial duties, within which the business of the term should be transacted.⁷⁰ It signifies that period of time between the first day of a term as fixed by law and the adjournment to the next court in course.⁷¹ It is the time prescribed for holding court, and not the time during which the court actually sits and is engaged in transacting business, which constitutes the term,⁷² and for many purposes, as for instance, the suing out and return of process,⁷³ or the filing of declarations,⁷⁴ a time appointed by law for the holding of a court is a term, although the court does not actually convene.⁷⁵ A term of court is distinguishable from "vacation,"⁷⁶ although it has been held that the space of time during which a court holds a session for the purpose of hearing and deciding any matters in vacation is a term of court for such purpose.⁷⁷

Appearance term is ordinarily the first term after legal service of process has been made,⁷⁸ or the term to which process is made returnable;⁷⁹ but as used in a statute relating to trials de novo in the supreme court the expression has been held to mean the term when it first becomes apparent that an issue of fact is to be determined.⁸⁰

General term is an expression sometimes used to indicate a sitting of the court in banc⁸¹ or the occasion when the court may exercise jurisdiction extending to the whole of a subject.⁸²

Jury term. A term may be a jury term in contemplation of law, although it is not so in point of fact, as where the legislature has designated it as one of the annual terms for the county and has provided a jury therefor and, although the judge has by order dispensed with a jury for the term, the dispensation is not absolute and a jury may still be had by affirmative order of the court.⁸³

Spring term. A term is a spring term of a certain year where it is specifically so described by statute, even though, in pursuance of a statutory requirement that it begin a designated number of Mondays before the first Monday of March, it commences in December of the preceding year.⁸⁴

A session of court is the time during a term in which the court sits for the transaction of business.⁸⁵ A court is not in session until the judge arrives and opens court,⁸⁶ but it is in session when the judge, attended by the court officials and the parties and their counsel and witnesses, proceeds with the dispatch of judicial business.⁸⁷ A statutory definition of "session" as part of a term of court, including all calls or sittings during any term, is substantially the same as the common understanding of its meaning by the courts without the aid of a statute.⁸⁸ Although the words "term" and "session" are sometimes used as synonymous, or nearly so,⁸⁹ there is a clear distinction between their meanings, which is sometimes important.⁹⁰

Sitting of a court may mean a session for the day,⁹¹ or the word may be used in such a way that it will be regarded as signifying a term.⁹²

Regular, special, and adjourned terms or sessions. Terms of court are very generally classified into regular terms and special terms⁹³ or regular, adjourned, and special terms.⁹⁴ So also, under the practice of some states, court sessions are regular, special or called, and adjourned.⁹⁵ A regular term of court is one held at a time and place fixed once and for all.⁹⁶ A special term is one called by the judge in his discretion, in pursuance of power granted by statute, and is convened or held at a time fixed, not by law, but by the order of the court or judge calling it;⁹⁷ it is separate and distinct from

There is a wide distinction between the legal significance of a "term" of court and a "session" of court. The former is the legally prescribed time for the actual holding of sessions of court within that time, and each occasion of such holding is a "session," and there may be as many or more of them as there are days allotted to the term.—Hinkle v. the regular term⁹⁸ and not a continuation thereof after adjournment.⁹⁹ A special term may¹ or may not² be called or appointed for a particular purpose. A special term is distinguished from the regular or general terms only in the date or time that it is convened or held,³ unless the expression has some other local significance.⁴ When a statute speaks of terms of court, the terms constituted by law, and not special terms, are meant,⁵ unless the statute by appropriate language expressly includes special terms in such designation or such conclusion is clearly apparent by implication.⁶

§ 148. Necessity for Terms and for Observing Terms Fixed

In some states there are no terms of court, the courts being always open for the transaction of business; and in other states this is true as to some courts or for certain purposes. Terms, however, are necessary when required by constitutional or valid statutory provision; and, when the time and place of holding a term or session of court have been properly fixed and appointed, persons having business at such term or session are bound to take notice thereof.

It has been considered that fixed times and places for holding court are necessary for the successful administration of justice, since otherwise all those interested in the proceedings of the courts might be kept in attendance upon an uncertainty.⁷ Unquestionably, a constitutional requirement of a certain number of terms each year is mandatory and it is beyond the power of a judge to pretermitt one of such terms.⁸ In some jurisdictions, however, the courts are always open for the transaction of business, except on nonjudicial days, and consequently there are no terms of court properly so called, during which the court may sit to hear and determine causes, but only a division of the year into sessions to facilitate the orderly arrangement and dispatch of business.⁹ So also, under the statutes of some states, there are terms for courts of law only, and a court of chancery or, as to equitable proceedings, a court possessing both legal and equitable jurisdiction, is required to be always open for the transaction of business.¹⁰ In some states, a probate or surrogate's court, or, as to its probate jurisdiction, a county court, is always open and its proceedings are continuous, there being no stated terms;¹¹ but, where so required by statute, the judicial business of a probate court must be conducted in regular monthly terms.¹² By statute, a court may have terms for certain purposes and be always open for other purposes;¹³ and by rule of court, authorized by the constitution and not conflicting with any statute, the court may be open all of the year for the trial of particular classes of cases.¹⁴

Where the time and place of holding a term or session of court have been properly fixed and appointed, it is the duty of parties having business at such term or session to take notice thereof, or to suffer the penalty, whatever that may happen to be, of their ignorance.¹⁵ So also, where the legislature has provided a number of regular terms without specifying that criminal cases only shall be tried at one or more of such terms, but the court has power to provide by order that only criminal cases shall be heard at certain regular terms, and it has made such an order as to a particular term, the entry of a default judgment in a civil action during that term is unauthorized.¹⁶

§ 149. First Day of Term and Relation of Proceedings Thereto

By a legal fiction, a term of court is deemed to consist of but one day and that is the first day, or day designated for the commencement, thereof. Where the operation of the fiction would work injustice or be inconsistent with a requirement that a certain thing be done on a particular day during the term, it will not prevail as against a showing of the true time when a step or proceeding was taken during the term.

The first day of the term is the day designated for the commencement thereof,¹⁷ whether the judge attends or not,¹⁸ where, as shown infra §§ 150 a, 155, such nonattendance does not preclude the holding of a legal term, or cause a lapse of the term, and even though the court is adjourned to another day.¹⁹

For all general purposes, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, a term of court, of however many days it in fact consists, is deemed to consist of but one day;²⁰ and that is the day on which it is first held, all of the proceedings during the term, with a few exceptions, having relation back to that day and being regarded as contemporaneous,²¹ and all succeeding days of the term being in contemplation of law only a continuation and part of the first, whether the court is adjourned from day to day or for a longer time.²² This doctrine is, however, only a legal fiction, and, although adopted for purposes of general justice and convenience, is subject to the rule which universally prevails in regard to all other fictions, that where it is requisite to show that the fact which by the fiction is supposed to exist is inconsistent with the truth, the real fact may be shown, and the fiction will not prevail against it. In accordance with this rule, the true time when any legal proceedings took place in term may be shown, when justice requires it.²³ For some purposes, such as where a day in term is designated, as the time when certain things are to be done, the term is divisible, and particular days thereof will be regarded,²⁴ or the court may inquire as to the day or the hour if it becomes important,²⁵ although never when the result of so doing will cause injustice.²⁶ In some states the fiction does not obtain,²⁷ or a departure therefrom is shown by statutes which manifestly contemplate different days of a term of court.²⁸

at any time other than that fixed therefor is illegal and the proceedings had thereat are void;³⁰ but it has been held that, although a court may convene before the time designated, a judgment rendered or an order made on a day subsequent to that fixed for the rightful convening of the court may be valid.³¹

Interval between terms. A statutory provision that a certain period shall intervene between the terms of a court must be complied with.³²

Term in one county at time fixed for term in another. Where the terms of a court are fixed by statute and there is but one judge, a term held in one county or part of the district during the time fixed by law for holding a term in another county or part of the district is illegal, and the proceedings thereat will not be sustained.³³

Where day fixed is holiday. If the day fixed for opening the term is a legal holiday the court may be opened on the succeeding day.³⁴

*Where no time is prescribed for holding a regular term or session, the justices, or a justice, as the case may be, may hold it at pleasure.*³⁵

Where judge fails to appear. The failure of the judge to appear on the day appointed for the commencement of a term of court will prevent the convening of a legal court,³⁶ unless the statute provides for the convening of the court on a later day under such circumstances,³⁷ or makes other provision for such emergencies,³⁸ and the statute is complied with,³⁹ although, as stated supra § 147, there may nevertheless be a term of the court for certain purposes.

b. Control, Fixation, or Change

Subject to constitutional limitations, the legislature may regulate and control terms of court and fix or change the times at which they are to be held, or it may delegate this power to courts, judges, or other boards or officers. An order made in the exercise of delegated power should appear in the record and any requirements as to the manner of making it or giving notice thereof must be complied with. Legal difficulties and impossibilities may make it necessary to defer the operation of a statute changing terms until an existing term is concluded and a county has for the year the number of legal terms to which it is entitled under a constitutional provision.

Within certain limits and reasonable bounds, the legislature may regulate and control the terms of courts;⁴⁰ but, to insure the survival and independence of the judiciary, the power is necessarily subject to limitations.⁴¹ It is within the power of the legislature to fix the times at which the regular terms of courts are to be held,⁴² subject, of course, to such constitutional requirements and limitations as may exist;⁴³ but this power may be delegated to the courts or judges thereof, or commissioners appointed for that purpose,⁴⁴ or to the governor of the state;⁴⁵ and when the legislature has so delegated its power, and days and places have been designated by those authorized to designate them, those days and places become the regular terms of court as much as if they had been expressly so enacted by statute.⁴⁶ Under some constitutions and statutes the county commissioners' court may fix the times of holding the terms of a county court and provide for more terms than the minimum number required by the constitution.⁴⁷

Where the terms of court are fixed by a judge, an order by him fixing the terms should appear affirmatively in the record;⁴⁸ and where certain essentials are prescribed by statute in connection with the making or publication of the order they should be complied with.⁴⁹ Where the terms of court are fixed by statute and a trial was had during a regular term, as shown by the transcript of record, at which term the officers required by law to hold the same were present and officiating, the fact that in the statement of the organization of the court there is a recital that the time for the regular jury term was by order of the presiding judge does not affect the regularity of the term.⁵⁰

Change. In the absence of constitutional prohibition, and subject to constitutional limitations, the legislature may change the terms of a court,⁵¹ repeal a statute fixing terms,⁵² or, where it has delegated authority to a court or judge to fix terms, withdraw the authority or supersede the order of the court or judge.⁵³ The power to change terms is sometimes delegated by statute to the courts⁵⁴ or to the judges thereof,⁵⁵ or authority to fix terms delegated to a court or judge is deemed to be a continuing power not exhausted by the first user thereof,⁵⁶ and an order fixing terms is considered not to be a judgment in the sense ordinarily meant, but to be more in the nature of a rule over which the court has continuous control.⁵⁷ However, where, although a court or judge is authorized to fix terms of court, there is a constitutional or statutory prohibition of a change, in the terms so fixed, either generally,⁵⁸ or for a limited period,⁵⁹ or except in a specified manner,⁶⁰ it will be accorded effect.

Where the judge has power to change terms, notice that he has ordered a changed term must precede the term, although it need not precede the order.⁶¹ It has been held that where a defendant is notified to appear at the next term, and such term is changed to a later month, he should appear without further notice.⁶²

An act which merely changes the time of holding a certain court does not abolish such court⁶³ or effect a discontinuance of business therein pending,⁶⁴ and a court which has convened prior to the passage of such an act is not prevented from concluding its term or session.⁶⁵ Neither can such a change be allowed to operate so as to deprive a county of the number of terms in a year to which it is entitled under the constitution.⁶⁶ However, where a law which changes the term of a court has gone into effect, and in ignorance thereof the term is held as provided by the former law, all judgments and proceedings are without warrant of law and void.⁶⁷ It is sufficient if a term is held at the time prescribed by a particular law where other laws do not change the time or purport to do so but are ineffective.⁶⁸ A term of court is properly held under a prior law where the emergency clause of an act changing the term is invalid and the act does not become effective until so long after its passage as to be too late to affect the term under the old law.⁶⁹ Where a statute changing a term of court does not become effective until after the date fixed for the beginning of the new term, the term cannot be held for the remainder of the period, the reason being that there is not, and cannot be, any legal commencement or beginning of the term, either by fiat of the law or by the presence of a duly qualified judge to preside over it.⁷⁰

§ 151. Duration of Terms

a. In general

b. Computation of time

a. In General

Unless terminated sooner by adjournment sine die, a term of court continues until its expiration by operation of law; and such expiration occurs on the date fixed for the termination of the term, where such a date has been fixed by statute or authorized order or, if no such date has been fixed, it occurs on the date fixed by law for the commencement of the next term of court at the same place or, according to some authorities, the commencement of a term of court in another county in the same judicial district. A special term may be longer than, and does not necessarily terminate on the commencement of, a regular term.

A term of court continues until it is finally adjourned or expires by operation of law.⁷¹ The time for the expiration of a term of court by operation of law may be a definite date⁷² fixed by statute,⁷³ or by an order made under constitutional or statutory authority,⁷⁴ for its termination.

Where the time of beginning but not of ending a term is fixed, the term, when it has been duly begun, will continue, and may for all general purposes be considered as in session, until it is adjourned sine die or, in the absence of a previous adjournment sine die, until the time fixed by law for the beginning of the next succeeding term;⁷⁵ and, in such case, after the term of a court has been opened, the questions how long it shall remain open, to what

(1) It is said that, at common law, a term of court can continue no longer than a legally prescribed time for that purpose and that in most, if not all, jurisdictions in America a regular term of court has a designated day for its termination.—Hinkle v. Rose, 26 S.W.2d 541, 233 Ky. 606.

(2) "We must look beyond this particular case, and declare the law as applicable to all terms of court; they must have a definite time of beginning, and, as far as possible, some definite time for ending; terms cannot continue indefinitely without business, to be revived in the discretion of a judge."—Reynolds v. Crosey, 150 N.E. 303, 306, 241 N.Y. 389, reversing 212 N.Y.S. 280, 215 App. Div. 683.

Presumption as to time of termination

Intent of statute directing judges to fix terms

A statute directing district judges to fix terms of court has been held not intended to control them in the length of time during which they should actually hold court in the different parishes, but to designate in advance certain periods as "terms of court," with a view of furnishing the basis to public officials for fixing dates for drawing juries, or of doing other acts necessary to be done a certain number of days before sessions of court.—State v. De Raillion, 26 So. 648, 51 La.Ann. 788.

After term has been adjourned to court in course, it does not continue until the time fixed by law for the commencement of the next term; if it did so continue, there would never be a time which was not term time.—Unbehahn v. Fader, 149 N.E. 773, 319 Ill. 250.

day it shall be adjourned, and whether and how often it shall remain open for incidental business after the regular business of the term has been concluded are matters which rest in the discretion of the judge,⁷⁶ the general rule being that the term should or may be continued until all the business before the court is disposed of.⁷⁷ So also, according to a number of authorities, mostly early ones, where the term of a court for each county in the district begins on a specified day, the duration of a term is ended by the arrival of the day fixed for the beginning of a term in another county;⁷⁸ but it has also been held that the commencement of a term of court in one county does not automatically terminate a term in another county, even though the counties are in the same judicial district and the same judge is elected to preside over the court in both counties,⁷⁹ or at least it does not do so where there is a statute authorizing sessions of the same court to be held in different counties at the same time,⁸⁰ or authorizing the adjournment or postponement of a term in session beyond the time fixed for holding court in another county,⁸¹ or providing that regular terms or adjourned terms of court in two or more counties in the same judicial district shall proceed until adjournment sine die.⁸² Unless finally adjourned at an earlier date, a term of a federal court expires automatically at the time fixed by law for the convening of the next term at that place,⁸³ but not at the time court is convened or a term begins at another place in the same district,⁸⁴ or at the time a term begins in another district in the same state.⁸⁵

Designation of a new term does not of itself, in the absence of a statute so providing, terminate a term theretofore established.⁸⁶

Absence of the judge does not work a termination of a term of court after it has been legally commenced,⁸⁷ unless he has left the bench for the term⁸⁸ so as to effect an actual adjournment sine die, as shown infra § 152.

Death of the regular judge does not end the term where his successor qualifies on the same day,⁸⁹ and a fortiori the death of such judge during a term held by a special judge previously selected does not end such term.⁹⁰

Special or extraordinary terms. Where a special term is not limited by law to any specified number of days, proceedings thereat will not be invalid because it continues in session for a longer period than the regular term of the court is limited to;⁹¹ neither are proceedings at a special term invalidated by a continuance of the term beyond the time fixed for a regular term.⁹² However, where an order for a special term does not fix any date for adjournment and it does not appear clearly therefrom that it is intended to overlap the regular term, it will terminate by operation of law when the time for convening the regular term arrives.⁹³ Also an extraordinary term, like all other terms, must come to an end some time.⁹⁴

The decisions are not in harmony as to whether Sunday is to be included in a term of court as the last day thereof or whether, where a term is to continue until a certain day, that day is to be included.

Under a provision that a term of court shall continue until a certain day, it cannot continue beyond that day;⁹⁵ and it has been held that it does not include that day;⁹⁶ but it has also been held to include the day named when it is the last day of the week or month.⁹⁷ It has variously been held that, where a term is to continue for one or more weeks, the last Sunday is⁹⁸ or is not⁹⁹ to be included; that the day designated for the expiration of the term is not to be counted where it is Sunday;¹ that where there is no adjournment sine die and the termination of the term is not fixed by statute, it ends at the close of the last business day preceding the commencement of the next term, that is, on Saturday where the next term commences on Monday;² that the term may include Sunday for the purpose of receiving a verdict on that day, although a term begins in another county of the district on the next day;³ and that the court may continue in session up to the latest hour which permits the judge to attend the next regular term,⁴ but should adjourn the term before the time limited for its expiration if it becomes necessary to do so for the purpose of traveling to another town in order to begin a term there on the day appointed by law.⁵

§ 152. Extension or Adjournment of Terms

- a. Authority and duty
- b. Requisites and sufficiency
- c. Operation and effect

a. Authority and Duty

Frequently statutes are deemed to measure the power of a judge to extend a term or postpone the commencement thereof by adjournment or otherwise; and occasionally recognition is accorded the inherent power of a court or judge in these matters. The power of a sheriff or clerk of court to adjourn court from day to day or to the next term is only such as is conferred on him by statute or an order of the judge authorized by statute.

A court or judge may extend a term under an applicable statute conferring authority to do so,⁶ such as a statute permitting this to be done when necessary for the transaction of the business of the court,⁷ for the disposition of pending litigation,⁸ or for the purpose of concluding a pending trial;⁹ and under court rule, or otherwise, than under a statute expressly conferring authority, it is sometimes held that a term, although ended for other business, may be extended or continued for the purposes of a particular case,¹⁰ such as for the purpose of passing on and deciding applications for a new trial¹¹ or of settling and signing a bill of exceptions,¹² or it may be deemed continued for the purpose of deciding cases and matters finally submitted to it during its regular and formal sittings.¹³ Indeed, it is held that, although the judge has not adjourned the term a certain number of days prior to the next regular term, as required by statute, the court is nevertheless open and may proceed as in term time,¹⁴ the statute being merely directory and not taking away from the presiding judge the inherent power to continue a term to meet the exigencies of the public business.¹⁵

The terms of a court may in some cases be extended by adjournment.¹⁶ A court, or at least a court of general jurisdiction, has inherent, and sometimes statutory, authority to adjourn a term from day to day or to a specified day to complete the business properly before it.¹⁷ Also, in keeping with statutory provisions, a term may be adjourned at the commencement thereof.¹⁸ A judge may have express¹⁹ or implied²⁰ power in certain situations, and subject to such restrictions as are imposed, to postpone the commencement of a term and put off the holding of court to another time, such as power, for good and sufficient reason, to direct a ministerial officer, previous to the day for the opening of the term, to postpone the term when the day for opening it arrives²¹ or authority, when the completion of a trial would proceed beyond the day fixed for the next term, to adjourn the latter term so that there may be sufficient time to complete such trial.²²

Of course, the power of a judge under a statute to adjourn or extend a term does not exceed that given by the statute and may not be exercised in cases or situations not within the statute.²³ Under a statute providing, as to particular courts or proceedings, such as chancery courts or criminal proceedings, that the court shall remain open until its next regular term, a court may and should take only a recess and not adjourn.²⁴ A term cannot be adjourned, extended, or revived after its expiration,²⁵ or after the expiration of a prior extension,²⁶ or where the court is not in session;²⁷ and there can be no adjourned term of a regular term which is illegal, because held at a time not authorized by law, so that all proceedings thereat, including the order of adjournment, are void.²⁸ Also a term should be extended only in cases of necessity and not for the convenience of the trial judge²⁹ or for the purpose of attending to future, as

Exhaustion of power by single exercise

The power granted by statute to a judge or chancellor who fails to attend at any term of his court to authorize the clerk or sheriff to adjourn the court to a later day is exhausted when once exercised, and, should the judge or chancellor fail to attend the adjourned term on the day appointed, the term cannot be adjourned on his order to a later day.—Williams v. Simon, 99 So. 433, 135 Miss. 562.

Limited to county court

A statute providing that, when regularly convened, the county court may be adjourned to such time as the judge may deem proper, provided it shall not conflict with the term of the court provided for at any other place in the county, is not intended as a grant of power to prolong the term, but merely commits to the discretion of the court the power to adjourn the session at the county seat from time to time as business may require.—Ex parte Haley, 214 P. 1090, 23 Okl.Cr. 339.—*Tucker v. distinguished from unfinished, business.³⁰ A motion for a further extension of the term for purposes of a case may be denied without prejudice to renew where the judge is not satisfied that an appeal has been taken in good faith and the extension, if it becomes necessary, can be granted at a later time.³¹

Extension beyond commencement of subsequent term. The power of the trial court to extend a term into a subsequent term for the disposition of unfinished business is entirely statutory.³² Under some statutes the term may be so extended for the purpose of carrying a pending case to its conclusion;³³ but, when prohibited or not authorized by statute, a term cannot be extended by adjournment or otherwise beyond the commencement of another term of the same character in the same county or judicial district, so as to overlap or conflict with the latter term,³⁴ although, both under statutory authority³⁵ and in the absence of some positive law to the contrary,³⁶ a court may adjourn a term in one county over an intervening term in another county.

Authority of particular judges. A supernumerary judge holding a regular term in the absence of the regular judge has power, according to the construction accorded pertinent statutes, to order an adjourned term.³⁷ Under the statutes of some states an extension of a term for the disposition of pending litigation may be made by the regular judge of the district regardless of whether court is being held by him or by another judge,³⁸ but an extension for the purpose of concluding a pending trial may be made by, and only by, the judge presiding at the trial, whether he be a regular, special, or visiting judge.³⁹ The power of a judge of a city court may or may not be so limited by the particular statute creating the court that he may not⁴⁰ or may⁴¹ have authority to adjourn or recess the term to a date beyond a certain period. The signing of a general order extending a term may be within an exception in a statute dealing with the disqualification of judicial officers.⁴²

Power of clerk or sheriff. In the absence of an applicable statute conferring authority, a clerk of court, although ordered or directed by the judge to do so, is without power to adjourn a term either finally⁴³ or to a future day.⁴⁴ Where a statute so permits, the sheriff, in the absence of the judge, may adjourn court from day to day⁴⁵ under a written order from the judge;⁴⁶ but under some statutes, on the inability of the judge to attend the regular term, the sheriff has power to adjourn the court only until the next term, and not from day to day.⁴⁷ Under a statute providing that, if the judge does not appear on the fourth day of the term, the sheriff shall adjourn court until the next regular term, the sheriff, of course, need not make such adjournment where the judge appears and opens court on the fourth day.⁴⁸

Rescinding adjournment. It has been held that, where a district judge, through a misapprehension that all litigants desired an adjournment of the term, adjourned the same, and a litigant was injured thereby, it was the judge's duty to rescind his action and thus relieve such litigant from the injury, provided he could do so without wronging some other innocent person.⁴⁹

b. Requisites and Sufficiency

There may be a final adjournment without an order; and under some statutes a term may be extended for a limited purpose without an order; but, to effect a continuance, extension, or temporary adjournment which will keep the term alive, there must be a compliance with any applicable statutory requirements.

In making either a temporary or final adjournment there may be, and in making a continuance, extension, or temporary adjournment for the purpose of keeping the term alive there must be, a compliance with any applicable statutes requiring a written⁵⁰ order,⁵¹ an entry on the minutes or records,⁵² and notice by publication or otherwise.⁵³ It is not necessary for a court to assign reasons for an adjournment and the holding of an adjourned term,⁵⁴ unless the statute forbids an adjournment except for certain specified reasons, in which case the order of adjournment must show the existence of one of such reasons.⁵⁵ Under a statute which,

Timely signature of minutes by judge is necessary to extend term.—Watson v. State, 146 So. 122, 166 Miss. 134.

Entry constituting final adjournment

Where the records of a district court recite under a certain date that court convened as per adjournment and continued in session during the day, "when it adjourned," the entry constitutes a final adjournment of the term, notwithstanding a subsequent entry at a later date of an order adjourning the term sine die.—Marengo Sav. Bank v. Byington, 112 N.W. 192, 135 Iowa 151.

Nunc pro tunc entry

(1) The order may be entered nunc pro tunc.

Ind.—Green v. White, 18 Ind. 817. Mo.—State v. Bush, 118 S.W. 670, 136 Mo.App. 608.

(2) Even a nunc pro tunc order correcting a prior adjourning order as to the date to which adjournment was made may save an adjourned term held on the corrected date; but it is otherwise where the correction produces a conflict with other orders and such orders may not be regarded as clerical misprisions, it appearing from the records of the court that adjourned sessions were to be held between the original and corrected dates, and, from undisputed testimony, that they were actually held.—Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Saunders, 94 S.W.2d 703, 192 Ark. 783.

(3) The order being an administrative, rather than a judicial, one, the rule is less strict and rigid as to the quantum and quality of evidence required to establish that the order, was made, as a condition precedent to the nunc pro tunc entry thereof, than in the cases of judgments or judicial orders.—Happy Coal Co. v. Brashear, 92 S.W.2d 22, 263 Ky. 257.

Filing

Where the statute requires only an order entered on the minutes and does not require that the order be filed or that it be put in writing, except through an entry in the minutes, the entry in the minutes constitutes the original order and if there is a separate writing evidencing the order it will be considered merely as a memorandum and it does not matter when, if at all, it is filed.—J. C. Dielman Co. v. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co., Tex.Civ.App., 23 S.W.2d 757.

Entry in minutes as notice

The notice which the public, and especially litigants, should have of the days on which courts are to sit and terms are to be held is fully accomplished by compliance with a statute providing for adjournment of a term from day to day, or to a specified day, by an entry in the minutes.—Reynolds v. Cropsey, 150 N.E. 303, 241 N.Y. 389, reversing 212 N.Y.S. 280, 215 App.Div. 683.

in some respects, makes an adjourned term a separate and distinct term, rather than a part of the original term, it has been held necessary, for the purpose of allowing a continuance of the term to be treated as an adjourned term, that the order of adjournment recite that the court is about to adjourn without having transacted its business and that the adjournment is taken to an adjourned term or employ language of similar import clearly showing an intention on the part of the court to create an adjourned term on reconvening.⁵⁶

There may be a final adjournment or adjournment sine die of the term, as distinguished from a temporary adjournment from day to day or to a day certain or other proceeding continuing or extending the term, even though the judge makes only an oral order and does not sign the minutes or record book containing the entry of adjournment.⁵⁷ Indeed, there may be an adjournment sine die without any order. Where the judge leaves the bench for the term there is an actual adjournment sine die,⁵⁸ although, as a matter of orderly procedure, the judge, when he leaves the bench for the term, should cause due notice of the final adjournment to be given by the crier.⁵⁹ Also the court stands adjourned after the expiration of the period prescribed by statute for the term where, prior to such expiration, the presiding judge discharged the jury, left the bench, ceased to hold court, and passed no order continuing court in session after the expiration of the statutory period.⁶⁰ However, the mere absence of the judge for several successive days during the term does not adjourn the term.⁶¹ Also merely excusing the petit jurors until a future date does not adjourn the term of court in the absence of an order of court to that effect.⁶² According to some authorities, there is no adjournment sine die where there is an adjournment subject to call⁶³ or an announcement by the court, after completion of pending business, "this is all for this time," without fixing a time for reconvening;⁶⁴ but, according to other authorities, as shown infra in subdivision c of this section, an adjournment for an indefinite time is equivalent to an adjournment sine die in so far as ending the term is concerned; and there are authorities, some of which construe or give effect to statutes, indicating that an adjournment or extension of a term other than to a fixed date or for a definitely fixed period is not authorized or justified.⁶⁵

Under a particular statute, no particular procedure may be necessary to bring about an exercise of the power of the presiding judge to extend a term in order to conclude a pending trial, it being proper for the judge to act on his own motion;⁶⁶ and where, under one statute, an order entered on the minutes is not necessary to extend a term, the fact that the extension is unnecessarily evidenced by an order entered on the minutes does not destroy the power existing without the order nor bring the extension within another statute authorizing an extension on different grounds and requiring an order.⁶⁷ Where, by virtue of statute, an order in term time setting a hearing in vacation is not necessary to give the judge jurisdiction to hear a demurrer to a motion to set aside a judgment, an agreement of the parties in term time for the hearing of the demurrer in vacation has the effect of extending the term for the purpose of the hearing.⁶⁸ While a term of court may be extended or prolonged by a standing rule,⁶⁹ a rule of court providing that appellant shall have a specified number of days from the day of allowance of appeal to file his bill of exceptions does not extend the judgment term.⁷⁰

The personal presence of the judge in the court room is not necessary to validate an adjournment announced by the sheriff, recorded by the clerk, and made pursuant to an order of court.⁷¹

c. Operation and Effect

- (1) In general
- (2) Adjourned or extended term

(1) In General

A term is ended by a final adjournment, on adjournment sine die or for an indefinite time, or an adjournment to the day fixed for the commencement of the next regular term, but not by an adjournment to a subsequent day in the same term, nor by a recess, provided it is not too long.

Notwithstanding some authority to the contrary in respect of an adjournment subject to call⁷² and a failure to adjourn to a specific time,⁷³ the rule adopted in some decisions is that a term is ended when it is adjourned finally or sine die or is continued or adjourned without fixing a time to reconvene, there being no difference in this connection between the words "continued" and "adjourned" and there being no magic in the words "sine die," the same result following, as in the case of a formal adjournment sine die, when there is a continuance or adjournment for an indefinite time or subject to the call of the judge or further order of the court.⁷⁴ Also an adjournment to the day fixed for the beginning of the next regular term puts an end to the current term.⁷⁵ On the other hand, an adjournment to a subsequent day in the term does not end the term or deprive the judges of control of the proceedings.⁷⁶ Furthermore, the declaration of a recess by the judge does not terminate the term,⁷⁷ although other courts of the circuit are held in the meantime⁷⁸ by the same judge.⁷⁹ However, a recess of a term of court indicates only a temporary suspension of proceedings with the understanding and expectation that, after a brief suspension, proceedings will be resumed;⁸⁰ and the court cannot, by taking a recess, keep the term alive for a long time to the end that the court may be reconvened for the purpose of taking up new business.⁸¹

The adjournment of a special term has no effect on the regular term.⁸²

Final adjournment of court for the term as legal discharge of jury see the C.J.S. titles Grand Juries § 33, also 28 C.J. p 796 notes 71, 72, and Juries § 206, also 35 C.J. p 309 note 36.

(2) Adjourned or Extended Term

- (a) Nature and duration
- (b) Scope and validity of proceedings thereat

(a) Nature and Duration

A proper and legal adjourned or extended term is not a new, distinct, and independent term, but rather is a part of the term adjourned or extended. Except in the case of an extension until the conclusion of a pending trial, it may continue so long as necessary for the transaction of business or, in some instances, until the commencement of the next term.

While there is authority for the view that an adjourned term is a distinct and separate term,⁸³ a legally adjourned term of court is not, it has generally been determined, a distinct, independent term, but is rather regarded as a continuance or part of the same term.⁸⁴ So also a proper extension of a

Corpus Juris is cited in a case where, however, it is held that the rule does not apply to the situation, the regular judge having corrected an error made by another judge, temporarily presiding during the trial of three cases, in announcing an adjournment sine die.—Southern Pac. Co. v. Jones, 202 P. 1095, 59 Utah 253.

After final adjournment of the term the court or judge is powerless to make any further valid orders in a cause in which a bill of exceptions was due at that term, save to cause proper entries nunc pro tunc to be made.—State v. Brannon, 110 S.W. 695, 212 Mo. 173.

term, whether regular or special, is not a new term, but instead is a prolongation and part of the term extended.⁸⁵

Commencement and termination. Where a term is adjourned or postponed at the beginning thereof, the return day thereof is also adjourned,⁸⁶ and the first day of actual session is the first day of the regular jury term.⁸⁷ An adjourned term may remain in session so long as may be necessary to transact its business.⁸⁸ Where a county court at a regular term makes an order adjourning the court to chambers, the adjourned term is in full force until the actual convening of the next term of court.⁸⁹ Also, where a term is extended until the time prescribed by law for the commencement of another term for the same county, it ends at the appointed time.⁹⁰

A term extended until the conclusion of a pending trial continues until, but not beyond, the time when all judicial acts appertaining to the trial, which have been duly invoked and are required by law to be done during the term in which the trial is had, have been done and due entry has been made of all such judicial acts as are required by law to be entered in the court record.⁹¹ This time may be the date of the entry of an order overruling a motion for new trial or rehearing⁹² or when judgment is entered and an appeal is perfected,⁹³ but not where the jury is discharged because of its inability to reach a verdict, where there remains anything proper to be done in respect of the final disposition of the case,⁹⁴ nor where a bill of exceptions or statement of facts is considered and approved, where, although such consideration and approval involve a judicial act appertaining to the trial of the case, the law does not require the bill or statement to be prepared and filed during the term at which the trial is had.⁹⁵

(b) Scope and Validity of Proceedings Thereat

As to business which, under the statutes and orders of court not inconsistent therewith, may be considered and disposed of at an adjourned or extended term, the court possesses and can exercise the same power, authority, and jurisdiction as at the original term; and its proceedings are valid if the adjourned or extended term is valid and is held at an authorized time.

Where an extended or continued term of court is invalid, as where the extension or continuance is unauthorized or is not made in a proper manner or at a proper time, all proceedings thereat are void.⁹⁶ Furthermore, where an extended term is held at an unauthorized time, the court is without jurisdiction and all its proceedings are void.⁹⁷ Conversely, where the adjournment, postponement, or extension is authorized and regularly made and, in pursuance thereof, a regularly constituted court is convened at the proper time, all acts done and proceedings taken at the adjourned, postponed, or extended term are valid.⁹⁸ Where adjourned terms are authorized by statute, it will be presumed, if nothing to the contrary appears, that the term to which a cause was adjourned was regularly held, and the cause regularly brought to trial thereat.⁹⁹

The court possesses the same power during an extended term as during the original term;¹ and it can exercise all the authority and jurisdiction at an adjourned term which it could exercise at the regular term.² The business which may be considered and disposed of at an adjourned or extended term depends on the statutes and orders of court not inconsistent therewith,³ but not on an order enlarging or limiting power fixed by statute.⁴ New actions may be brought⁵ and, with the consent of the parties, may be tried⁶ at an adjourned term.

Whether the same panel of petit jurors may be retained for the adjourned part of a term is considered in the C.J.S. title Juries § 206, also 35 C.J. p 309 notes 40, 41, p 310 note 45. As to the competency of the same grand jury to serve see the C.J. S. title Grand Juries § 33, also 28 C.J. p 796 note 74.

§ 153. Continuance of Proceedings beyond Term

Ordinarily, business unfinished at the end of a term goes over to the next term; but in some instances, under statute or otherwise, the court retains jurisdiction and may continue in session, if necessary, beyond the term for the purpose of completing business which was commenced, and as to which the action of the court or judge was invoked, during the term.

Ordinarily, business which is unfinished at the end of a term goes over to the next term,⁷ all causes not tried or otherwise disposed of being continued as of course or by operation of law to the next term, as noted in Continuances § 12. It has been stated generally that there is an inherent power in courts to finish at a succeeding term business commenced at a previous term.⁸ However, an unfinished trial cannot be taken up at the next term where left off at the prior term and be proceeded with from that point.⁹

In some instances, under statute or otherwise, a court is deemed to retain jurisdiction and to have power to continue in session, if need be, beyond the term for the purpose of completing and disposing of business which has been commenced, and as to which the action of the court or judge, as the case may be, has been invoked during the term,¹⁰ such as for the purpose of concluding a trial in progress at the time fixed for the expiration of the term,¹¹ rendering a final decree in an equitable case which has been heard,¹² hearing and determining a motion for new trial,¹³ or making an order necessary to enforce a decree.¹⁴

§ 154. Simultaneous or Conflicting Terms

There cannot be two terms of the same kind of the same court at the same time and place and presided over by the same judge; but the decisions are not in harmony as to the validity of simultaneous terms of the same court in different counties in the same district or circuit, whether presided over by the same judge or by different judges.

Where the first half of a term is for civil business and the last half for criminal business, a motion for a new trial in a civil case tried during the first half of the term may be heard during the last half of the term, the division being one merely for convenience.—Mann's Mercantile Co. v. Smith, 64 So. 929, 107 Miss. 16.

14. D.C.—Dutton v. Parish, 34 App. D.C. 393.

Ordinarily there cannot be two terms of the same court at the same time, in the same place,¹⁵ and presided over by the same judge;¹⁶ and it has also been held that there cannot be two regular terms of a circuit court in session in two counties of the same circuit at the same time,¹⁷ although there is authority for the view that courts of the same kind may sit at the same time in different counties in the same circuit or district.¹⁸ It has been held that, where a judge is required by law to hold court in two counties at the same time he may in his discretion hold court in either county,¹⁹ and that, by means of an adjournment or recess so that actual sessions do not conflict, two terms, in different counties of the same district, presided over by the same judge, may be open at the same time;²⁰ but the latter proposition has been denied,²¹ and an act requiring a judge to hold court in two districts at the same time has been held void.²²

Simultaneous terms of different courts may be held in the same county;²³ where a court has two or more branches, different judges may sit in different branches at the same time;²⁴ terms of federal courts in different districts of the same state may be held simultaneously;²⁵ where there are sufficient judges, simultaneous sessions of the same court may be held, as shown infra § 162, or a regular and a special term may be held simultaneously at the same place or at different places in the same district, as stated infra § 156; and where a specified time, whether that time should be in vacation or during a term, has been appointed for the hearing in chambers of a motion for a new trial, the jurisdiction of the trial judge to pass on the motion at the appointed time is not ousted by the opening of a regular term of a county in the circuit by another judge.²⁶

§ 155. Lapse of Term

The lapse of a term prevents any subsequent proceedings at that term, all causes being continued to the next term by operation of law. After the term has been opened, the failure of the judge to attend on an adjourned day does not cause the term to lapse; and the common-law rule that the failure of the judge to attend and open court on the day fixed for the beginning of the term results in a lapse of the term has, to some extent, been obviated by statutes permitting the selection of a temporary judge to take the place of the absent judge or providing, on the nonappearance of the judge, for adjournments by a ministerial officer or by operation of law for a limited period during which court may be convened.

A failure to open court on the day fixed for the beginning of a term results, at common law, in a lapse or loss of the whole term, so far at least as the holding of court is concerned;²⁷ but where no particular hour for the convening of the court is fixed, the judges may lawfully meet and open court at any time before the close of the day, and the term does not lapse because they fail to appear before noon.²⁸ The inconvenience resulting from the common-law rule has led to a very general enact-

Conflict

Two courts in the same circuit presided over by one judge cannot legally be held on same day; even if it were physically possible for the judge to reach both places on the same day, it cannot legally be done, because the law does not take account of different parts of a day in fixing the time for holding court. Also, a statute providing that the court shall continue in session from day to day until the business is disposed of does not authorize court to stand open from day to day so as to conflict with holding court in another county in same circuit.—Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Graham, 196 S.W. 940, 129 Ark. 550.

Corpus Juris is cited in a case where, however, there was no order recessing or adjourning the court first opened, but the judge, after opening court, impaneling and instructing the grand jury, calling the civil docket, and setting cases for trial, went to another county, held court there for one and a half days, adjourned the term finally and returned to the first county in time to receive the indictment in question, and it was held that the term of court in the first county and the indictment were valid.—Crausby v. Abrogation of rule by custom

Notwithstanding common-law rule, the opinion has been expressed that custom, which has ripened into law, has largely, if not entirely, abrogated the rule as it relates and applies to fixed regular terms, although the reason for the abrogation does not apply to a special term called for a particular purpose at a particular time.—Hinkle v. Rose, 26 S.W.2d 541, 233 Ky. 606.

ment of statutes preventing a lapse of the term, by permitting some ministerial officer, during a limited period, to adjourn sessions until the judge shall appear, or by giving the mere nonappearance of the judge the effect of an adjournment from day to day for a limited time, within which the court may be convened;²⁹ but even under these statutes, and adjournments made under the authority thereof, a term may lapse where the judge does not appear and court is not opened before the expiration of the statutory period for making adjournments³⁰ or on the day to which an adjournment has been taken.³¹ In some states the attorneys in attendance may prevent the lapse of the term by the selection of one of their number to take the place of the absent judge,³² and such a situation has also been cared for by statutes permitting county officials to appoint a temporary judge where the regular judge does not appear.³³ Whatever statutory provision that may obtain in the particular state, the course designated thereby must be followed or the term will lapse where the judge fails to attend at the time fixed for the commencement of the term.³⁴

Where there is no law requiring the observance of any particular ceremony in opening, the court must be regarded as open by operation of law, so as to prevent the lapse of the term, whenever, on the day appointed, the judge, attended by the proper officers, is present at the place designated, even though, because of unfinished business in another court, the judge may not be able to proceed immediately with the business of the court just opened.³⁵

After a term has once been opened the failure of the judge to attend on a day to which it is adjourned does not have the effect of causing the term to lapse,³⁶ since, as stated supra § 151, it continues until it is adjourned sine die or expires by law; but there is some authority for the view that, where the court adjourns from one day to another given day, a failure to meet on the day to which the court is adjourned will result in a lapse of the remainder of the term, unless there exists some statute which prevents such lapse.³⁷ The setting aside of a first venire and ordering the drawing of a second does not cause a term to lapse where the court remains in session.³⁸

Effect of lapse. Where a term lapses all causes properly triable thereat, whether civil or criminal, stand continued by operation of law,³⁹ and any subsequent proceedings at such term are void.⁴⁰

§ 156. Special or Extraordinary Term

Special terms of court are frequently held to be valid and legal, especially as against objections to the time of the calling or holding thereof.

Where the authority to call a special term existed, it will be presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that such term was regularly called and held.⁴¹ The rules governing the convening of regular terms of court are but the work of the legislature which may be changed by a subsequent legislature; and none of the provisions of general laws relating to the convening of courts generally can avail where they are in necessary conflict with a later statute governing the calling of special terms and providing for the repeal of all laws inconsistent therewith.⁴² The organization of the court at a special term is not void because no jury was summoned where, owing to the exhaustion of the jury box, no jury could be summoned by the clerk before the court convened.⁴³

There is no necessity for calling a special term where the court is required by constitutional provision to be in session continuously for ten months of the year and the case in question is tried during such a session.⁴⁴

Time for calling and holding. Special terms of court are generally considered valid as against objections directed to the time of the calling or holding thereof, it being variously held that: An order for a special term may be made in vacation;⁴⁵ a statute requiring the supreme court justices, on or before December 1, in every second year, to appoint special terms, is merely directory as to date;⁴⁶ statutory provisions for procuring jurors in advance of a term of court, compliance with which requires action at least fifteen days in advance of the term, do not by implication forbid the calling of a special term to be held within less than fifteen days from the date of the order, where there is another statutory method for procuring jurors;⁴⁷ a statute, although mandatory as to the calling of a special term of court in a certain situation, as noted infra § 157, does not deprive the judge of discretion in determining the particular date on which the special term is to be held;⁴⁸ a special term of court may be valid although it is not held within ten days after the call therefor, as required by statute, where there is no showing of prejudice to accused in a criminal case tried at the term and the statute, construed with reference to its purpose to protect persons accused of certain crimes from mob violence, may be regarded as directory;⁴⁹ a special term is not necessarily unauthorized or invalid because it is organized during the period covered by a regular term;⁵⁰ a term of court convened by the judge after the adjournment of the regular term, but within the time during which the regular term might have continued, may be a special term, and not the regular term reopened in an unauthorized manner;⁵¹ general or regular and special or extraordinary terms of the same courts may be held at the same time and place where the statutes permit it and there are sufficient judges;⁵² a special term of court may lawfully be held while a regular term is in session at another place in the same district, where there are two judges, each having authority to hold court in such district;⁵³ a special term may be held during a recess of the regular term;⁵⁴ a judge may hold a regular term in one county and meanwhile hold a special term in another county,⁵⁵ as by transacting business at the special term during a recess or temporary adjournment of the session in the other county;⁵⁶ and an order, made at a regular term, that a special term be held in the week following that fixed for the regular term in another county, is not illegal.⁵⁷ However, it has also been held that a judge who is required by law to hold court in a certain county has no authority to appoint a special term to commence in another county at the same time.⁵⁸ Furthermore, where the legislature has provided, for a certain time and place, a regular term exclusively for civil business and at which a grand jury is not to be impaneled, a judge cannot repeal the statute nor abolish the statutory term by calling a term of court for the same time and place and naming it a special term.⁵⁹

§ 157. — Authority to Appoint or Hold

Under statutory authority, a special term may be called by a judge or, in some states, by the governor, in his discretion. What particular judges may call or hold special terms depends on the laws of the state in question.

The legislature has power to appoint special terms of courts,⁶⁰ subject, of course, to constitutional requirements;⁶¹ but this power may be delegated⁶² to judges without violation of constitutional provi-

sions⁶³ and, as a general rule, is delegated to them and they are given authority to call or hold special terms of their courts.⁶⁴ In a particular state, however, there may be no legal authority for the holding of a special term of a county court,⁶⁵ the terms, other than the minimum number prescribed by the constitution, which the commissioners' court is held to have exclusive power to fix,⁶⁶ being deemed to be regular, and not special, terms.⁶⁷ Also the statutory power of a judge to extend a term does not authorize the calling of a new term,⁶⁸ nor does the authority of a court to continue its sessions from day to day until its business is transacted embrace the holding of a special term.⁶⁹

An order calling a special term is not necessarily unauthorized because the judge making it is disqualified to act in a case to be disposed of at the special term.⁷⁰ A special judge may provide for a special term;⁷¹ and under the laws of some states, which vest him with all the powers of a regular judge, he may call a special term for the trial of the cases he is designated to try;⁷² but the laws of other states vest authority to call special terms primarily⁷³ or exclusively⁷⁴ in the regular resident judge. While a judge need not be within the county at the time of calling a special term pursuant to statutory authority,⁷⁵ nevertheless where he is elected to serve within a given district, he is without power to call a term of court in another district unless he is called in and designated to sit as a trial judge in such other district.⁷⁶ In some states the justices of the supreme court have exclusive power to call special terms of lower courts,⁷⁷ or the chief justice of the supreme court has power in this respect concurrent with that of a judge of the lower court⁷⁸ or when the latter judge declines to act.⁷⁹

Except in a few situations where, by statute, there is a mandatory duty to call a special term,⁸⁰ the judge vested with authority to call a special term may be guided by his own opinion as to the necessity or propriety of the term and, in his discretion, may call or refuse to call it.⁸¹ Indeed, one view is that the call may be made or refused at the will or pleasure of the trial judge;⁸² but another view is that the power is not absolute.⁸³

Persons accused of crime are not entitled to be heard on the advisability or necessity of calling a special term of court for the trial of criminal cases.⁸⁴

The governor of the State has, in some states, statutory authority to appoint or call special or extraordinary terms of courts.⁸⁵ Where this power is granted it is for the governor alone to decide as to the necessity for such a term,⁸⁶ and his discretion in the matter cannot be reviewed.⁸⁷ A statute not vesting the governor with any discretion, but making it a mandatory duty on his part, on the mere application of the solicitor, to call an extra term is unconstitutional.⁸⁸

§ 158. — Order Appointing

Statutory requirements as to the contents and entry of an order appointing or calling a special term should be complied with; and all facts essential to the jurisdiction of the court at such term must exist and appear; but where jurisdiction exists, certain defects or misrecitals may not be fatal. The order may be revoked or set aside, or it may be amended at a proper time, although not after a case has been tried, so as to give jurisdiction thereof.

Where the statute prescribes what an order appointing a special term shall contain, there must be a compliance with such requirements,⁸⁹ and the order should recite every fact required by the statute as a condition to the calling of such term.⁹⁰ Where the statute prescribes no set form to be used by a judge in appointing a special term, any form will be sufficient which clearly indicates the purpose,⁹¹ and an order of a judge calling a special term is not invalid because it designates the term as adjourned instead of special,⁹² or recites that the authority therefor is derived from the constitution instead of from a statute,⁹³ or fails to fix an adjourning date or specify the length of the term.⁹⁴ The fact that the order fixing a special term states that it is for the purpose of resuming business under the regular term does not change the character of such term as a special one.⁹⁵ The order need not recite that a special term is necessary, as the order is of itself an affirmation of this fact,⁹⁶ nor need it contain an affirmative recital that the holding of the special term will not interfere with any other court to be held by the same judge.⁹⁷ Where a person accused of crime has been properly tried and condemned, it is immaterial whether the order calling the special term at which he was tried was signed by the judge.⁹⁸

An order by the governor assigning a judge to hold a special term of court need not specify any particular case to be tried;⁹⁹ nor does a misnomer of a person upon whom an alleged crime had been committed invalidate the order.¹ An order of the governor, pursuant to his statutory authority, for a special term of a court of general sessions is not rendered nugatory by the fact that it needlessly confines the term to the disposition of all the cases on the criminal docket.²

Two orders made a few days apart, the second to supplement the first, calling a special term of court for the same day, are to be treated as one.³

Amendment. A defective order, calling a special term to try criminal cases, cannot be amended nunc pro tunc after the trial of a case so as to give the court jurisdiction over that case;⁴ but it can be properly amended the same day it is made.⁵

Giving style of each case to be tried
(1) Where a statute mandatorily requires an order calling a special term to give the style of each case to be tried at such term, an order ostensibly extending a regular term cannot be upheld as in fact calling a special term where it does not comply with this requirement.—Daniel v. Commonwealth, 18 S.W.2d 790, 227 Ky. 604.

Setting aside or revocation. An order for the calling of a special term may be revoked by the court making the same, and a different time appointed for the holding of such term.⁶ When one judge succeeds another who during his incumbency ordered a special jury term, the new judge may set aside the order.⁷

Entry. Where the statute requires the order calling or appointing a special term to be entered on the records of the court, such entry must be made,⁸ although it has been held that where every element of jurisdiction of the court at a special term, as to subject matter, parties, time, and place, is present, and the judge has performed every duty imposed on him, the mere fact that the clerk failed to enter on the minutes of the court the order calling the special term does not oust jurisdiction.⁹ Every fact essential to give the court jurisdiction at a special term must appear on the record of the order therefor;¹⁰ but where the important and necessary jurisdictional fact that the term convened is a special term sufficiently appears, an erroneous recital that the date on which the term is convened is the time fixed by law for holding court is not fatal;¹¹ and where the order, including the signature of the judge, is copied in full on the records of the court, the jurisdiction of the court vests and is not defeated by the subsequent act of the clerk in erasing the name of the judge from the record.¹² Where the order, although entered of record as of the last day of the regular term, was in fact made after the expiration of such term and as direct an attack on the order as the circumstances will permit is made, parol evidence is admissible to show the truth regarding the entry of the order.¹³

§ 159. — Notice

Notice of a special term, otherwise than by the filing or entry of the order calling it, is not necessary unless required by an applicable statute which is not construed to be merely directory.

In the absence of a statutory requirement, it is not necessary to give any notice of a special term other than the filing or entry of the order calling the term,¹⁴ such filing or entry being sufficient,¹⁵ and all parties being bound to take notice thereof.¹⁶ Indeed, in some states statutes requiring notice by advertisement, posting at the courthouse door, or other designated mode, are deemed to be merely directory and not mandatory;¹⁷ but in other states compliance with such a statutory requirement is considered essential to the validity of the term and the proceedings thereat.¹⁸ Even in the latter states a substantial compliance may be held sufficient and a technical defect or lack of strict or exact compliance may be regarded as an irregularity merely and not a jurisdictional defect.¹⁹ It will be presumed that proper notice was given.²⁰

Under some statutes, publication in a newspaper, although necessary under some circumstances, may be dispensed with where the special term is appointed in an adjourning order;²¹ and under other statutes, which make the entry of an order on the records of the court at its next preceding regular term and the posting of a notice, signed by the judge, at the courthouse door alternative methods of calling a special term, a notice so posted is alone sufficient as a call,²² but is not necessary where a special term is called by an order duly made and entered at a regular term.²³

§ 160. — Jurisdiction and Authority

Provided the term is authorized and is legally called and held, the court has the same jurisdiction and authority at a special or extraordinary term as at a regular term, unless there is a statutory limitation or an effective limitation in the order calling the term.

A judge is without jurisdiction to try cases at a special term where the order calling the term is invalid because not complying with statutory requirements.²⁴ Where a special term is unauthorized all proceedings thereat are void,²⁵ and the same is true where the facts essential to authorize the holding of a special term do not exist.²⁶ However, the convening of an extraordinary term under authority of law does not exclude the exercise of jurisdiction at other terms;²⁷ and even though an order calling a special term of court for the trial of a case is invalid, the case is properly tried where, after service of a sufficient notice of trial, it is tried on a day of the regular term of the proper court.²⁸ A plea to the jurisdiction of the court at a special term is properly overruled where the term has been duly called and the judge holds a valid commission.²⁹ Also it may sufficiently appear that a special term is a de facto, if not a de jure, term, so that all things done thereat are valid and binding, especially as to a person pleading guilty.³⁰

Subject to the provisions of pertinent statutes³¹ and the order or notice calling the term,³² a court at a valid special or extraordinary term has the same jurisdiction and authority as it possesses at a regular term.³³ Sometimes a statement in the order or proclamation calling or appointing a special term of the purpose thereof or the particular business for which the court will convene is deemed not to affect the power of the court or judge, the statement being regarded merely as matter of inducement and as not conferring or limiting jurisdiction or enlarging or diminishing the rights of litigants.³⁴

A special or extraordinary term is governed by the same procedure as at a regular term and must be conducted in accordance with the rules governing all other terms.³⁵

Particular matters which may be done at a special term include the disposition of a docketed case,³⁶ the removal of a cause to another county,³⁷ and the making of an order for the publication of notice of the result of a local option election.³⁸ So it has been decided that at a special term suits may be commenced and determined;³⁹ and, while it is otherwise under a statute prohibiting the hearing of any new civil suit at a special term,⁴⁰ such a prohibitory statute does not apply to nor preclude the hearing of a statutory election contest.⁴¹ A case which, although filed as an ordinary action, has been treated as an equity action may be tried at a special term called for the trial of equity cases.⁴² Criminal cases,⁴³ including indictments returned at that term,⁴⁴ may be tried at a special term unless, it

An order reciting that important business is pending, and that it is to the interest of the county that a is held, the special term was ordered "for the trial of causes upon the civil docket."⁴⁵ The power of the court to summon and impanel a grand jury for a special term is considered in the C.J.S. title Grand Juries § 4, also 15 C.J. p 894 note 1, and 28 C.J. p 765 notes 33-35. There is authority for the view that at a special term called for the disposal of unfinished business of a regular term only such causes are triable as could have been tried at the preceding regular term;⁴⁶ but, in accordance with this view, a case is triable where it was triable at the preceding regular term⁴⁷ and a decree pro confesso may be taken where it could have been taken at a preceding regular term.⁴⁸ Under a statute providing that at a special term of court any cause ready for hearing may, with the consent of the parties, be heard, the court cannot at such a term, without such consent, hear a demurrer to a bill and dissolve an injunction.⁴⁹ In some jurisdictions an act authorized to be done by a judge at chambers may be performed by the court at special term.⁵⁰

§ 161. Sessions of Court

To function judicially, a court must be lawfully in session.

Courts can exercise judicial functions only when lawfully in session.⁵¹ A statute providing that district courts shall be at all times in session and open at any place in the district where the judge may be, for the purpose of hearing and determining motions, rendering final decrees in equity, etc., is valid.⁵²

§ 162. — Time for

The pertinent and divergent laws of the different states have given rise to a variety of holdings, but not many rules of universal application, respecting the time for sessions of courts.

While the sittings or sessions of a court shall be held at the times prescribed or authorized by law,⁵³ the governing law may vary in different states, or in the same state at different times, and sometimes is quite broad as to the authority conferred thereby.⁵⁴ Sometimes the hours of convening court and the length of the sessions are regarded as matters necessarily in the discretion of the trial judge.⁵⁵ However, it is improper for the trial judge to limit sessions to such short periods, such as ten minutes each, as to prevent the prompt dispatch of judicial business and prolong a particular trial for a period of more than two months and compel counsel, litigants, and witnesses to attend court on a great many different days.⁵⁶

Holding of night sessions of court is a matter resting in the discretion of the trial judge, and a court of review will not interfere unless it clearly appears that there has been an abuse of the judge's power and that injustice has been done.⁵⁷ Suffi-

54. Authorized rules

Under a statute providing that courts shall be held at certain hours in every judicial day, or so often as the board of justices of the court may direct, rules enacted by such board as to the frequency and hours of sessions of court have the force of law.—Matter of Bolte, 90 N.Y.S. 499, 97 App.Div. 551—15 C.J. p 894 note 10.

Change of law during session

Where a session is held at a time and place designated by law, the fact that during the session an act is passed which fixes a different time for holding the court does not affect the jurisdiction of the court to continue its session, there being no provision in that regard.

tion controversies must be construed as directory and not mandatory.—In re General Election in City and County of Philadelphia, on November 8, 1938, 2 A.2d 301, 332 Pa. 457.

In Louisiana

(1) Under the laws of Louisiana the fixing of dates for the holding of sessions in each parish, in a district composed of more than one parish, does not affect the authority or duty of the judge to sit at any time in any of the parishes of his district when the public interests may require it.—State v. Kane, 136 So. 80, 173 La. 36—15 C.J. p 876 note 77, p 894 note 11.

(2) Notwithstanding other provisions as to sessions, effect may be given, in a proper case, to a constitutional provision expressly authorizing the judge to try misdemeanors at any time.—State v. Hincey, 56 So. 620, 129 La. 636.

cient notice of a night session is given by an announcement thereof in open court.⁵⁸

Shortening or prolonging sessions. Where the duration of sessions is fixed by constitution or statute, the court has no power to shorten them,⁵⁹ although it may prolong or extend them.⁶⁰

Continuous sessions. The expression "continuous sessions during ten months of the year," as used in a constitutional requirement, means that courts shall be opened for the trial of cases, and that the judges shall fix cases for trial and try them during that period, provided there are cases to try.⁶¹ Sometimes sessions of courts are regarded as continuous, although terms and vacations are specified by rules of court.⁶² Under an organic act relating to territorial courts and providing that "the first six days of every term of said court, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be appropriated to the trial of causes arising under said constitution and law," such a court is convened for federal and territorial business, and is in session for both purposes from the beginning of its term until it finally adjourns for the term.⁶³ A court will be presumed or regarded as having been in continuous session between specified dates in a term where the term had not lapsed by expiration of law and there is no showing of any order of adjournment sine die, or to a day certain, or otherwise.⁶⁴

Simultaneous sessions. Where a court has more than one judge, simultaneous sessions may sometimes, under constitutional or statutory authority, be held by the different judges.⁶⁵ Under such authority there may be at the same time as many sessions in a single county as there are judges therein, including not only resident judges but also judges assigned to the county and those acting pro tempore.⁶⁶ Even in the absence of statutory authority, it has been considered that the holding of simultaneous sessions, while an irregularity, does not render the proceedings at one of such sessions void as to a party who actually participated in a trial thereat.⁶⁷ Indeed, there would be little or no advantage in having two or more judges if simultaneous sessions could not be held.⁶⁸

Special or extra sessions. Under the laws of some states there may be special sessions;⁶⁹ but the statute of another state regarding extra sessions was impliedly repealed by a constitutional amendment.⁷⁰ When notice that the court will convene in special session is deemed necessary to serve the purposes of justice and to avoid entrapping the unwary, the court may cause such notice to be given; but it need not give notice to a plaintiff.⁷¹

69. In Alabama

(1) Under statutes requiring the courts to be open for the transaction of business during two specified periods covering practically the entire year and also requiring causes on the dockets for trial to be called peremptorily at the time fixed by law and at such other times as may be fixed by order, the time for transaction of business of court within the statutory limits is left with the circuit judges, and order of circuit judge, calling term of circuit court to be opened for disposition of pending cases, is authorized.—Jennett v. State, 168 So. 224, 27 Ala.App. 174.

(2) Only limitation on power of judge of circuit court to appoint time for holding of court other than times fixed by law, if any, is that it must be held within time designated by statute.—Carson v. Sleigh, 78 So. 229, 201 Ala. 373.

(3) The court may call a special jury session; and even if a provision in the order should be read as limiting the cases triable to those at issue on the date of the order, the limitation is not binding on, and may be disregarded by, the court.—Caldwell v. State, 84 So. 272, 203 Ala. 412.

(4) While an entry should be made on the minutes of the court whenever a special session for the trial of any cause or causes is ordered, the jurisdiction of the court does not depend on such an order being entered on the minutes, as, under the statute, the court is in session practically the entire year.—Doty v. Pope, 101 So. 883, 213 Ala. 4.

(5) It was immaterial that the judge ordering a special session during the regular term was the junior judge of the circuit where he was the presiding judge at the time the order was made.—Medders v. State, 99 So. 776, 19 Ala.App. 628.

In Louisiana, rules of court do not affect discretion of judge to convene his court in special session when the public business can, in his opinion, be best served thereby.—State v. Holmes, 161 So. 182, 182 La. 142.

70. Cal.—People v. Ferguson, 12 P. 2d 158, 124 Cal.App. 221, rehearing denied 12 P.2d 960, 124 Cal. App. 221.

probate has no power to hold a court for the hearing of a particular case at any time or place other than those fixed by law, and any decree passed at a session so held is void;⁷² but there is also authority for the view that a constitutional provision that probate courts shall be held at times and places fixed by law does not deprive them of jurisdiction over proceedings at other times.⁷³

§ 163. — Adjournment

A recess or adjournment may be taken from one day to another in the same term on compliance with such statutory requirements, if any, as are applicable. After adjournment, the court may reconvene and transact business either on the day on which the adjournment is made or on the day to which it is taken, but there is a conflict of authority as to whether it may do so on any other day.

The sessions or sittings of a court during the term are as a general rule within the control of the court, and it may adjourn its session from day to day or for a longer period,⁷⁴ provided the adjournment is to a day which is not beyond the time to which the term can legally continue.⁷⁵ Furthermore a court may be recessed from one day to another of the same term.⁷⁶ Indeed, an adjournment from one day to another is a mere recess in the sessions of the court.⁷⁷ While a court may on the opening day of a term, adjourn to a fixed day later in the term,⁷⁸ it cannot take a recess until after it is organized for the term.⁷⁹ Recess or temporary adjournment of pending trial see the C.J.S. title Trial § 45, also 64 C.J. p 84 note 83-p 85 note 97.

Retention or discharge of jury. A jury may be retained without the court remaining in session continually from day to day,⁸⁰ and the retaining of the impaneled jury after adjournment does not amount to an attempt to keep the court in session and to continue its proceedings during the period of adjournment.⁸¹ The final discharge of the jury for the term terminates the sittings of the term, it is held, although no formal adjournment is had until the next ensuing term begins, and special sittings are held after the discharge of the jury.⁸² Even under the most liberal construction, it is said, the session or sitting of the court is over, as to a particular case, when, after the final discharge of the jurors, the judge signs an order overruling a motion for a new trial and delivers the papers in the case to counsel, to be returned to the clerk.⁸³

Order, entry, and notice. Under some statutes an order of adjournment is necessary to the validity of an adjourned session.⁸⁴ The date of an adjourned session may be fixed by oral order in open court,⁸⁵ and, while it is the duty of the clerk to make a note of such an order, his failure to do so is not fatal to the validity of the adjourned session,⁸⁶ and the order may be entered on the minutes nunc pro tunc at any time.⁸⁷ However, where an adjournment has not been to a day certain, the error cannot be cured by a subsequent antedated order fixing the day of the adjourned session, and a nunc pro tunc entry thereof.⁸⁸

While the court may not act to entrap the unwary at adjourned sessions and may cause notice to be given where it is deemed necessary to serve the purposes of justice, no one need apprise a plaintiff of the fact that the court will convene at an adjourned session; having invoked the jurisdiction of the court, he must take notice of its adjournments.⁸⁹

Inapplicable statutory limitation of time

An adjournment for a longer period than that specified in a statute providing that if the judge of the court is absent for more than a designated time his court shall be adjourned until the next regular term is not prohibited by such statute, which is applicable only to those cases where the judge is absent without regular adjournment.—Redwine v. Absence of statutory requirement

Where the statute under which a court of general jurisdiction proceeds in a certain matter in vacation does not require that in case of adjournment there shall be a written order entered on the record showing the adjournment, the jurisdiction of the court does not depend on the formal entry of such an order.—Lake County Schools v. Griffith, 105 N.E. 760, 263 Ill. 550, Ann.Cas.1914D 1136.

A statute requiring the posting of notice on the door of the courthouse where court is adjourned by the sheriff in the absence of the judge is not applicable where the judge opens court and then orders an adjournment, and no notice of such adjournment need be posted.⁹⁰

Effect; subsequent transaction of business. An adjournment which is a mere recess in the sessions of the court, such as an adjournment to the next day, carries all calendar matters with it.⁹¹ Also it is undisputed that a court may reconvene for the transaction of business on the same day on which it has adjourned.⁹² However, there is a divergence of authority as to whether, after an adjournment, the court may reconvene, transact business, or exercise any functions on any day other than the one on which the adjournment is made and the one to which it is taken; it has been both affirmed⁹³ and denied⁹⁴ that the court can revoke an order adjourning court to a subsequent day of the term, and reconvene before the time first fixed. Also it has been held that, although the court has adjourned to a day certain, it may convene before that day if no one is prejudiced thereby;⁹⁵ but, according to other authorities, after the expiration of the day on which an adjournment is made the functions of the court cease until the day fixed for reconvening and it cannot reconvene and transact business in the interim,⁹⁶ unless there is an applicable statute permitting it to do so on giving notice and the record of reconvening shows affirmatively a compliance with the provisions of the statute.⁹⁷ Furthermore, it has been held that where the judge is unable to hold a session on the day fixed by the order of adjournment, a session held on a subsequent date within the term is valid;⁹⁸ but it has also been held that the adjourned session will necessarily fail unless the place of the absent judge can be temporarily supplied, or the session itself adjourned in some way,⁹⁹ and that, in the absence of an order adjourning court from the adjourned day to a later day, a subsequent session is unauthorized.¹

§ 164. Place for Holding Terms and Sessions

A court may be held only within the territorial limits of its jurisdiction and at a place designated by, or under authority of, law. Proceedings at an unauthorized place are generally held to be void; but sometimes they are regarded as unassailable collaterally and as being merely voidable on direct attack by a party who has not acquiesced therein or otherwise waived objection thereto.

Constitutional and valid statutory provisions designating the place for holding court or terms or sessions thereof will be accorded effect, they being mandatory and exclusive of other places;² and where the place is so fixed the court cannot lawfully be held at any other place.³ Proceedings at an unauthorized place are usually held to be void,⁴ unless, as is permissible in some,⁵ although not otherwise,⁶ jurisdictions, the parties consent to the holding of a session in a place other than that appointed. It has been held, however, that under such circumstances the proceedings are not void, the court being a de facto one,⁷ or that the proceedings are not absolutely void so as to be vulnerable to collateral attack,⁸ especially where the only thing done by the court at an unauthorized place is the hearing of testimony, the remainder of the proceedings being taken at the proper place.⁹

When not prohibited by constitutional provision, the legislature may prescribe¹⁰ and change¹¹ the place for holding courts. In the exercise of its plenary authority over Porto Rico, congress might, it is said, even provide that all judicial proceedings should be held in the United States instead of on the Island.¹²

In some cases the power to designate the place for holding court has been conferred upon the judge;¹³ but, to be effective, such designation must be formally made and filed as required by statute.¹⁴ Where no place for the holding of a session is prescribed by statute or otherwise, it may be held, at the discretion of the judge or judges authorized to hold it, anywhere within his or their territorial jurisdiction.¹⁵

State. It has been held that the court does not exceed its jurisdiction when it takes a view of premises in another state.¹⁶

County. Under the constitution and statutes of a state, a court of one county may be without jurisdiction to try a suit and render judgment while sitting in another county;¹⁷ a judge may be without authority, except by consent, to hear a cause, or to make any order substantially affecting the rights of the parties, outside the county in which the action is pending;¹⁸ and, a fortiori, an action, the venue of which is exclusively in one county, is not required to be tried in another county.¹⁹ However, the taking of a view and the hearing of the testimony of some witnesses in another county has been considered an irregularity which cannot be urged as a ground for reversal by a party who, personally and through counsel, acquiesced and actively participated therein.²⁰ While an order overruling a motion for a new trial and granting time in which to prepare and file a bill of exceptions is void where it is made in, and by a court of, a county and circuit other than the one in which the judgment was made and entered and the case is not within a statutory exception allowing, in a stated situation, the presentation of a motion for new trial to the judge of the district in which the verdict or decision was rendered, wherever he may be found,²¹ the argument of a motion for a new trial at a place outside the county in which the case was tried, but in the same judicial district, will not invalidate an order for a new trial duly made and entered in the county in which the action was tried.²²

District. A special term of a federal court called to dispose of a motion to remand a case to a state court must be held in the district in which the cause is pending;²³ but matters which may properly be heard in chambers may be heard outside the district.²⁴ In a district court of inferior jurisdiction, a mere trial, without a transfer of the record of the cause and without the rendition of judgment, at a place in the county other than where the action is brought before a judge having jurisdiction coextensive with the county, may not be legally objectionable.²⁵

Adjournment or transfer to another place. A court may be without power or authority to adjourn from an authorized place to another place,²⁶ such as another county.²⁷ However by proceeding with the trial without objection after adjournment to another place, a party waives an objection that the trial is concluded at a place where no term of court has been appointed to be held.²⁸ Also, the transfer of a cause from one place or session to another may be authorized by statute.²⁹ Where a statute provided for the adjournment of the term of a court to another place in the county on publishing notice thereof for three weeks in a newspaper, and an amendatory statute provided that the court might adjourn to another place in the county for one or more days whenever the public good would be promoted thereby, it was held that notice by publication was unnecessary as to parties having actual and seasonable notice of the adjournment.³⁰ The failure of the record to state the place to which a case is adjourned does not necessarily cause loss of jurisdiction.³¹

§ 165. — Seat of Government or County Seat

The highest court ordinarily is held at the seat of government. Other courts may and should be held at the county seat unless the holding thereof elsewhere is authorized by legislation not contravening constitutional provisions.

Ordinarily the supreme or other highest court in a state is held at the seat of government,³² and such courts as county, district, and circuit courts are generally and properly held at the county seat.³³ A constitutional or statutory provision that a court shall be held at the county seat is mandatory and the court cannot be held elsewhere;³⁴ but it is within the power of the legislative department to authorize the holding of court at a place other than the county seat,³⁵ unless, of course, this would violate some constitutional provision.³⁶

37. Mo.—Hambricht v. Brockman, 59 Mo. 52, 57.

b. Use, Designation, Suitability, and Control

While a court may be and ordinarily is held in a room in the courthouse, it may be held elsewhere. While other bodies or officers are charged with the duty of providing suitable buildings or rooms for the holding of courts, the court or judge may pass on the suitability of the quarters furnished and exercise control over the courthouse to the extent necessary to secure suitable rooms for, and to prevent interference with, the discharge of public business.

Terms and sessions of courts are ordinarily held at the courthouse,³⁸ and it is proper that they be held there³⁹ in a suitable room therein;⁴⁰ and it is improper to take up a case and render judgment in a room adjoining the court room without notice to a party's attorney who is in the courtroom waiting for the case to be called.⁴¹ However, it is not in all cases essential to the validity of a court's proceedings that the court be held in the house or room where its sessions are usually held;⁴² it may properly be held elsewhere where there is a reason for the change,⁴³ as where the courthouse is undergoing repairs or is otherwise unfit for occupancy,⁴⁴ or it has been destroyed by fire or otherwise,⁴⁵ especially where there is statutory authority for a change on account of some such reason.⁴⁶ Where a session of court is required to be held at a county seat where there is no courthouse, the court may meet in any suitable place within the county seat.⁴⁷

It has been held both proper⁴⁸ and improper⁴⁹ to adjourn court from the regular courtroom to a hotel, residence, or other place on account of the illness or physical incapacity of a party, witness, juror, or judge. At any rate, it is not error to refuse to take the jury to the home of a witness.⁵⁰

From the beginning of the American occupation of Porto Rico, congress has, at least by necessary implication, approved of the use of the Santo Domingo Barracks by the Porto Rican courts.⁵¹

Duty to provide. As a general rule, by statutes which are not unconstitutional,⁵² the duty is imposed on cities or counties where courts are held to provide suitable buildings or rooms for that purpose,⁵³ and the court is sometimes given power, by statute, in case suitable rooms are not provided, to direct the sheriff to provide them.⁵⁴ Where a statute creates the office of courthouse commissioners and imposes on them the duty of constructing and maintaining a courthouse, the offices of such commissioners continue even after the building is completed and paid for, until the legislature otherwise provides.⁵⁵

"permanent accommodations" cannot be dispossessed by the treasury department of the United States from the occupancy of such rooms as have been permanently appropriated for its use.⁵⁶

Decision as to designation and suitability of quarters. It is for the court to judge as to the suitability of the quarters and other equipment furnished to it.⁵⁷ It has been held that quarters which county supervisors propose to furnish for a circuit court are neither suitable, adequate, nor convenient, where there is no jury room therein, and the county supervisors may be enjoined from moving the court into such quarters.⁵⁸ Under a statute providing that where there is no courthouse in the county, or it is undergoing repairs or is unfit for use, the board of supervisors shall designate some other suitable building in which the courts of the county may be held, the court must be held at the courthouse or the place designated by the proper authorities,⁵⁹ and it is the first duty of a judge, when called on to hold a term of court in a place rather than the regular courthouse, to decide whether such place has been lawfully designated,⁶⁰ but his decision that it has been so designated is final and not open to collateral attack in cases thereafter before the court.⁶¹

Control of courthouse and vicinity. A judge has inherent authority to control over the courthouse and courtrooms to the extent of preventing any interference with the discharge of the public business and of securing a suitable, convenient, and comfortable place for the transaction of such business.⁶² Indeed, according to some authorities, if, and so far as, necessary to prevent noise and disturbance in the courtroom, a court or judge may even barricade a street or stop traffic thereon.⁶³

Where a county board has charge of a courthouse as real estate simply, the courthouse as such being in the custody of the sheriff and subject to the court's direction, the county board has no power to dictate to the courts what court rooms they shall respectively occupy.⁶⁴ However, where the control of the location of courthouses is vested in the county commissioners, a circuit court of a state has no power to change the location of a courthouse.⁶⁵ The commissioners of a courthouse district, under their power to maintain the courthouse, have power to erect a fireproof vault in which to keep records of real estate transfers required to be kept at the courthouse.⁶⁶

§ 167. Vacations and Proceedings Therein

Under the construction of some statutes, as well as at common law, vacation is limited to the period between terms; but, as used in other statutes, it includes a recess extending over one or more judicial days. The transaction of judicial business in vacation is not permissible unless authorized by constitutional or valid statutory provisions; and, except where it is provided otherwise by constitution or statute, such business cannot be transacted then even though the parties consent.

At common law "vacation" means the period between the end of one term and the beginning of another,⁶⁷ and not intervals of time between the actual sessions or meetings of the court during the term, such as those resulting from temporary recesses or adjournments.⁶⁸ Whether the common-law meaning should be given to the word "vacation" as used in a particular statute depends on the subject matter, scope and purpose of the law and the sense in which the word was used by the framers of the law.⁶⁹ Some statutes are deemed to use the word in its common-law sense and not as signifying the intervals of time between the actual sessions of the court during the term;⁷⁰ but other statutes are considered to use the word as including any recess during the term caused by an adjournment over one or more judicial days or days on which court might legally have been held, this being a broad and liberal sense in which the word is sometimes employed in practice.⁷¹ It has also been held that there is a vacation where, although the court is kept open for the purpose of hearing matters ex parte, and no order of final adjournment is made, the court ceases to meet in the court room from day to day and no parties can be compelled to appear;⁷² but there is authority for the view that where the practice obtains of entering no order of sine die adjournment at the close of the actual session of the court for a stated term, and the court is left open so that further sitting may be taken up as a part of that term, at any time when the business of the court requires it, there is no technical vacation, although the court is not in actual session.⁷³ A hearing on an application for the appointment of a receiver is deemed to have been before the court and not before the judge in vacation, where the petition was entitled at a particular term which did not terminate until after the conclusion of the trial.⁷⁴

It has been said that "vacation" and "chambers" may be used interchangeably.⁷⁵

The general rule is that all judicial business should be transacted by a court in term time,⁷⁶ and that such, and only such, business may be transacted in vacation as is specially authorized by constitutional or valid statutory provisions.⁷⁷ A court without jurisdiction to act in vacation cannot acquire it by agreement of the parties unless it is so provided by law;⁷⁸ and under a statute allowing judicial business, or certain kinds thereof, to be transacted in vacation with the consent of the parties, it is necessary and sufficient that the business in question be within the statute and that the parties consent to the transaction thereof in vacation.⁷⁹ The foregoing rules are applicable to such matters in vacation as the trial of civil causes generally, see the C.J.S. title Trial § 30, also 64 C.J. p 60 notes 35-39, a criminal conviction,⁸⁰ the trial of a prosecution for a misdemeanor,⁸¹ the rendition of decisions and judgments in cases heard and submitted during term time,⁸² the making of an order releasing sureties on a bond,⁸³ and the disposition of a petition to set aside a decree for divorce and alimony and grant a new trial.⁸⁴ Actions may be instituted at any time, whether during the session or in vacation of the court;⁸⁵ and during the summer recess, when the court is hearing only matters of emergency, it may hear a matter which qualifies as one of emergency.⁸⁶

For a discussion of the rendition and entry in vacation of judgments generally see the C.J.S. title Judgments §§ 16, 114, also 33 C.J. p 1067 note 88-p 1070 note 95, and 34 C.J. p 66 note 82-p 67 note 93, judgments by confession see the C.J.S. title Judgments §§ 154, 166, also 34 C.J. p 111 notes 93-95, p 125 note 74-p 126 note 87, and judgments by default see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 207, also 34 C.J. p 183 note 46-p 184 note 50.

§ 168. Designation or Assignment of Judges

The courts lean toward upholding the validity and sufficiency of an order assigning a judge to sit in another court or to hold court in another county or circuit; but, nevertheless, in order that the judge may have authority and jurisdiction in the court, county, or circuit to which he is assigned, the judicial or executive officer making the assignment must have authority to make it, or, at least, the assigned judge must be a judge, ex officio or otherwise, of the court to which he is assigned, or have general jurisdiction and authority to sit in any county or circuit.

An order by the governor, chief justice, or other designated officer or officers assigning a judge to sit in another court or to hold court in another county, district, or department, on account of the disqualification of the regular resident judge, the congestion of the calendar, or other adequate cause, is valid and sufficient to confer jurisdiction where it is authorized by a constitutional provision, valid statutory provision, or authorized rule of court⁸⁷ and there is a substantial compliance with procedural requirements.⁸⁸ To the end that it may be held valid and sufficient to confer jurisdiction, the order of assignment will be liberally construed and presumptions indulged in its favor⁸⁹ whenever there appears therein any basis by which the scope and extent of the authority of the assigned judge can be determined;⁹⁰ and it will not be held ineffective because of mere irregularity in procedure,⁹¹ especially noncompliance with a directory statute⁹² or an administrative rule of court.⁹³ However, an order of assignment is insufficient in itself to confer jurisdiction where the chief justice or other officer making it is without power to do so;⁹⁴ and in such case, or where there is no assignment whatever, a judge of one court who is not a judge, ex officio or otherwise, of another court until he is assigned thereto under authority conferred by rules of court, cannot perform judicial acts in the latter court or hold a term thereof.⁹⁵ Also an order may be insufficient because of uncertainty as to the duration of the assignment;⁹⁶ but where a judge is regularly assigned a pertinent statute, properly construed, may be of aid in determining what term or terms may be held by him.⁹⁷ To be valid, statutes relating to the assignment or detailing of judges to cer-

(2) After presiding judge had designated qualified judge of his district to hold term of court within county of such district, governor was without authority to designate outside judge to preside thereat where regular and properly designated judge was competent to act and there was no accumulation of business before court which would cause delay of trial.—State ex rel. tain courts, or to the judges or judicial officers who may preside over such courts and sit for the trial of causes therein, must, of course, not contravene constitutional provisions.⁹⁸

Where a judge has general authority and jurisdiction to hold court in any county or circuit in the state, at least on assignment, and he accepts an assignment, he has full authority to act, regardless of whether or not he could have been compelled to accept it.⁹⁹

While statutes providing for the assignment of causes in a circuit by the local presiding judge ought to be followed,¹ they are merely directory and have no relation to jurisdiction.²

§ 169. Attendance of Sheriff or Other Officer

A sheriff should be in attendance at the sessions of court held in his county; but he may do so by deputy.

While it is one of the usual duties of the sheriff to attend in person or by deputy at the sessions of court held in his county,³ his presence is not necessary to the organization or continuance of the court,⁴ and attendance by a duly qualified deputy is sufficient.⁵ He has no power to originate motions or present questions, in the names of the parties to a suit, for the action of the court.⁶

V. RULES OF PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE

§ 170. Power to Make Rules

- a. Power of legislature
- b. Power of courts

a. Power of Legislature

The legislature, subject to the constitution, may establish rules of procedure for the courts, and where it enacts a positive rule, the court has no discretion. Where the legislature fails to prescribe methods of procedure, the parties are relegated to the former practice of the court.

It is within the power of the legislature, subject to such provisions as may be incorporated in the constitution, to establish the procedure by which courts shall exercise their jurisdiction,⁷ and where

b. Power of Courts

- (1) In general
- (2) Regulation of practice in another court

(1) In General

Subject to the requirement of reasonableness and the provisions of the constitution and statutes, courts have inherent power to make their own rules of practice and procedure.

A rule of court has been held to mean uniformity, regulation in practice alike to all suitors, established and fixed, as much as a statute itself, and known to all litigants and attorneys;¹⁰ also an order generally made by a court having competent jurisdiction;¹¹ an order made by a court between the parties to a cause before it, or touching the discharge of duty by those engaged in the conduct of its proceedings, either as permanent officers of the court or as serving therein in some temporary capacity.¹² The term may include commands to lower courts or court officials, to do ministerial acts;¹³ and, as sometimes used, the term has been held to be intended for the word "judgment."¹⁴ In the federal judicial code the term has reference to a standing rule having the force of law.¹⁵ As used in this Title, the term is confined to rules of practice and procedure established by courts to facilitate the conduct of their business, and which are applicable alike to all cases and all litigants or their counsel.

While courts are very generally authorized by statute to make their own rules for the regulation of their practice and the conduct of their business, a court has, even in the absence of any statutory provision or regulation in reference thereto, inherent power to make such rules,¹⁶ subject to limitapower of the courts, in practice or procedure, beyond the scope of its provisions.—People ex rel. Weeks v. Platt, 159 N.Y.S. 920, 173 App.Div. 451.

the constitution is valid although it conflicts with a statute.²⁶ A rule of court made to carry out a statute cannot broaden the statute.²⁷ although, on the other hand, it has been held that the mere fact that a rule goes beyond the provisions of a statute does not make it inconsistent therewith.²⁸

Purpose of rules. Court rules of practice are adopted to facilitate the business of the court and to promote the orderly and expeditious administration of justice²⁹ and for the benefit of the parties as well as for the benefit of the court.³⁰ Rules which promote the speedy determination of the rights of litigants, provided they are such as will protect the rights of persons and property, must be given judicial sanction in preference to rules based purely on technical distinctions, the effect of which is only to hinder and delay the courts in the administration of justice.³¹

Uniformity. A rule of court respecting attorneys must apply uniformly to all attorneys appearing in court, irrespective of their place of residence in the state.³² So, a rule relating to jury trials should apply in all counties of the state, and a special rule applicable only in one county is beyond the power of the court.³³ A constitutional provision that the judges of the superior court shall, from time to time establish rules for the government of such courts, has been construed as intended to insure uniform rules of minute procedure, and not as a grant of power to make broad and general rules.³⁴

Special rules for particular cases may sometimes, under statutory authority, be made when justice so requires,³⁵ although the effect may be to exempt such cases from the operation of the ordinary rules of court.³⁶ However, it has been held that courts have not inherent power to extend an existing practice to meet a particular situation or to create a new procedure without legislation.³⁷

(2) Regulation of Practice in Another Court

The higher courts, if authorized by the constitution or statutes, may make binding rules of procedure for the inferior courts. The inferior courts may make rules of their own with respect to matters for which the higher court has not provided. A trial court cannot make rules to govern procedure in an appellate court. Rules adopted by an appellate court for its own practice have no application to the practice in lower courts. The rules of a court in one county are not binding on the corresponding court in another county.

In the absence of some authority under either the constitution or a statute, an appellate court has no power to make rules which are binding on an inferior court as to practice and proceedings in the latter;³⁸ but such power may be conferred by constitutional provisions or by statutes not contravening the constitution.³⁹ The power of "superintending control" over inferior courts conferred by the constitution on the appellate court has been held to include the power to promulgate rules of practice for the inferior courts,⁴⁰ and rules so prescribed are held to be promulgated under the inherent power of the court,⁴¹ and have all the binding force of a statute, as stated infra § 176. Such a provision abrogates the inherent common-law power of such inferior courts to make rules of practice,⁴² of a permanent and general nature, and convenient merely but not necessary to the administration of law by such inferior courts,⁴³ at least to the extent to which such matters are regulated by rules established by the higher courts,⁴⁴ although it is considered that, notwithstanding such provisions, the lower courts retain the power to adopt rules of their own with respect to matters for which the higher court has failed to provide.⁴⁵ Sometimes the rules of an inferior court are subject to the approval of a higher court.⁴⁶ Rules adopted by a supreme court for its own practice have no application to the practice and procedure in the lower courts.⁴⁷

The principle that courts may prescribe reasonable rules, not contravening the constitution or statutes, nor affecting substantive law, has been applied to rules regulating various matters of practice and procedure.

Only such matters as are not regulated by general or special laws in reference to practice and procedure,⁵¹ or which are inadequately provided for by such laws,⁵² may be regulated by a rule of court. Among matters which, subject to this principle and to the rules as to reasonableness and conformity to constitutional and statutory provisions, as set forth supra § 170 a, may be regulated by court rules are: Issuance of attachment;⁵³ notices of appearance;⁵⁴ calendars and dockets;⁵⁵ the publication of legal notices or trial lists;⁵⁶ application or petition for certiorari;⁵⁷ parties;⁵⁸ the necessity of pleadvalid as seeking to regulate matters specifically covered by rules of appellate division, and as contravening provision of municipal court code, providing that in matters of bills of particulars, procedure in municipal court code should be that prescribed in Civil Practice Act and rules adopted.—Cohen v. Smith, 294 N.Y.S. 470, 162 Misc. 192.

Rule of trial court cannot repeal statute or render nugatory its requirement for a call of the docket on appearance day or as soon thereafter as may be practicable.—Duval County Ranch Co. v. Drought, Tex. Civ.App., 260 S.W. 298.

(1) The court rule requiring that an application for writ of certiorari to review an award of the industrial accident commission shall be accompanied by proof of service of a copy thereof on the commission and requiring application to state material evidence if application is based on want of evidence to support commission's conclusion does not conflict with constitutional provision that all decisions of the commission shall be subject to a review by the appellate courts.—Lavore v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra.

(2) In view of Civ.Code 1910 § 6140, in considering question of grant of petition for certiorari, and, if granted in disposing of case, supreme court will only consider questions raised in petition, rule of supreme court as to petitions not being in conflict with Const. art 6 § 2 par 5.—Mitchell v. Owen, 127 S.E. 122, 159 Ga. 690, reversing 121 S.E. 699, 31 Ga.App. 649.

58. Ill.—Collateral Finance Co. v. Braud, 18 N.E.2d 392, 298 Ill.App. 130.

Rule held valid

Mun.C. Rules, rule 15, of Chicago, requiring the nature of a defense to be specified, does not conflict with the statutes of the state, because the Municipal Court Act provides that rules of pleading may be changed in actions in such court.—Matthiessen v. Duntley, 225 Ill.App. 249.

Demurrers

Under Code Civ.Proc. § 421, providing that code rules govern sufficiency of pleadings, it is inferentially intended by § 431, providing that demurrer must specify grounds thereof or be disregarded, that if demurrer does specify grounds authorized by § 430, defendant is entitled to have a ruling on the merits, and Super.C. Rules, rule 10 par 8, requiring notation of authorities on demurrer, but containing no penalties for refusal, could not override the statute so as to permit the court to refuse to pass on the demurrer by reason of the omission of the notation.—Wigman v. Superior Court of California, in and for Los Angeles County, 239 P. 427, 74 Cal.App. 132.

Motions

The right of one adversely affected by a verdict to move to set it aside at the same term at which it is returned, or any time before judgment is rendered thereon, should it not be rendered at the same term at which returned, may not be abridged or taken away by a rule of court denying the right to make such motion after two days from the return of the verdict, it not appearing that such abridgment of the right in any way facilitates the administration of the law.—

tors' reports;⁸⁹ affidavits to accompany exceptions to an account;⁹⁰ applications for rehearing;⁹¹ judgments or decrees generally and by default;⁹²

(2) Chancery court could not deprive a defendant who has demanded a jury trial in his answer of the right to such trial given him by statute, although defendant had not complied with rule of court requiring defendant to demand a jury by a motion in court after joinder of issue, such statute being mandatory, and such rule of court being in conflict therewith.—*World Granite Co. v. Rules held invalid

(2) The statute requiring judges to write out their charges and read them to jury, when requested to do so, is mandatory, and failure to comply with such request was error requiring new trial, even though court rule provided that judge was not required to reduce charge to writing, since rule is in conflict with statutes, and in such cases statutes must prevail.—Dixon v. State, 174 So. 311, 234 Ala. 11, answer to certified question conformed to 174 So. 313, 27 Ala.App. 441, followed in 174 So. 315, 234 Ala. 226, denying certiorari 174 So. 313, 27 Ala.App. 441.

(4) Assuming that, under Lord L. § 916, the circuit court, in the absence of statute, can by rule require the payment of the jury fee four days before the cause is called to be set for trial under penalty of losing the right to a jury trial, such a rule violates Lord L. § 1117, as amended by L.1915 p 91, requiring the clerk to collect such fee at the time the action, suit, or proceeding comes on for trial by jury, especially as the amendment eliminated a provision for payment two or four days before the case was called.—*Schnitzer v. Rules held valid

(1) Probate court rule that on filing of statement of objection within six months after entry of decree nisi in divorce case no decree absolute shall be entered because of mere efflux of time without some judicial disposition of objections is a valid rule, preventing decree nisi from becoming decree absolute by lapse of time, notwithstanding longer period than six months has elapsed after statement of objections has been filed until objections have been disposed of.—Diggs v. Diggs, supra.

(2) Superior court had authority to establish Divorce Rules, rule 6, providing that before six months from granting of decree of divorce nisi libelee or other interested party may file statement of objections to absolute decree, and that such decree shall not become absolute until such objections have been disposed of, and rule has force of law.—*Feldman v. Contempt of court

(1) The statute giving municipal court judges power to adopt rules regulating practice in such court in addition to statutory provisions prescribing practice therein authorized their adoption of rule that failure of defendant in replevin to deliver replevied property to court bailiff should be deemed contempt of court.—Universal Credit Co. v. Antonsen, 22 N.E.2d 790, 301 Ill. App. 334, transferred 19 N.E.2d 366, 370 Ill. 509.

(2) The Chicago municipal court rule, that failure of defendant in replevin to deliver replevied property to court bailiff shall be deemed contempt of court, is not rule of substantive law, but purely practice rule within statute empowering municipal court judges to adopt practice rules.—Universal Credit Co. v. Antonsen, supra.

(3) Such rule is not invalid as in conflict with Replevin Act.—Universal Credit Co. v. Antonsen, supra.

(4) Nor is it invalid as in conflict with general laws of state, as it is in addition thereto.—Universal Credit Co. v. Antonsen, supra.

(5) The judge of Chicago municipal court could reasonably deem rule adopted by the judges, that failure of defendant in replevin to deliver concealed property described in writ to court bailiff, should be deemed contempt of court necessary and expedient for proper administration of justice within statute authorizing such judges to adopt practice rules deemed necessary or expedient for such purpose, as such rule gives remedy in addition to those provided by statute to discourage concealment of property and disobedience of court's commands.—*Universal Credit Co. v. b. Jurisdiction and Remedies

The rule-making power of a supreme court does not extend to a modification or limitation of the jurisdiction of any other court as fixed by law,¹¹ nor can a supreme court prescribe rules of procedure which will preclude any court from exercising judicial functions in a matter in which jurisdiction is properly invoked.¹²

Remedies. Rules of practice and procedure adopted under a practice act are strictly limited to carrying legislation into effect and cannot give new remedies or extend or curtail existing ones.¹³

Substituting general for limited jurisdiction

That a court of limited jurisdiction may exercise its discretion in use of rules of practice of court of general jurisdiction does not substitute, nor authorize court to substitute, general jurisdiction for limited jurisdiction specified by statute.—Barry v. Regulating fundamental rights

Notice or process of some kind is a fundamental right and is jurisdictional in nature and not a mere matter of practice to be regulated by a rule of a court which does not have common-law jurisdiction.—Wilmington Trust Co. v. Baldwin, Del. Super., 195 A. 287.

Rule held valid

Where a statute provides that a nonresident defendant in a chancery suit may be served with the subpoena by publication thereof in a newspaper within the state, and by posting it at the courthouse door, the court may further provide by rule that, where the residence of defendant is stated, either in the bill, or in the affidavits to obtain publication, the register shall inclose to him by mail within forty days from the time of making the order a copy of the order posted up at the courthouse. Such a rule is valid and will be enforced.—Butler v. Butler, 11 Ala. 668.

Rules held invalid

(1) Since the acts necessary to give jurisdiction as specified by stat-they do not contravene the statutes nor affect fundamental or substantive rights.

Courts of general and superior jurisdiction have inherent power to control and recall their process,¹⁴ and may make rules governing the issuance and service thereof, not contravening statutory regulations nor affecting principles of substantive law.¹⁵

d. Appeal and Error

Reasonable rules of court regulating practice and procedure with respect to appeal or error are valid if not in contravention of the constitution or statutes.

Subject to the principle that rules of court must not contravene constitutional or statutory provisions nor regulate substantive rights, courts may, especially where the legislature has provided no mode of procedure, adopt reasonable rules of practice with respect to appeals and writs of error,¹⁶ such as the time within which the proceeding for review must ute cannot be added to, or limited by, a rule of court, compliance with Code Civ.Proc. § 413, in mailing summons to a defendant whose residence is known, will not be affected by failure to observe a rule of court requiring such mailed documents to be registered.—Klokke Inv. Co. v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 179 P. 728, 39 Cal.App. 717.

(2) Adoption of district court rule eliminating personal service on respondents in irrigation company's proceeding for change in point of diversion was beyond court's jurisdiction.—San Luis Valley Irrigating Dist. v. Centennial Irrigating Ditch Co., 272 P. 9, 84 Colo. 502.

(3) A municipal court rule that such court may direct service of summons in such manner as it deems proper in case of officer's inability to make due service thereof is void as authorizing each judge of such court to make whatever orders he sees fit in each case in violation of act authorizing majority of judges to make rules.—Danoff v. Larson, 15 N.E.2d 290, 368 Ill. 519.

(4) A rule providing that an application to the court to raise any jurisdictional question shall be deemed an appearance, and no further process shall be necessary to bring the party into court, is invalid. Jurisdiction over a person can never be acquired, unless by a method which the law specifically provides, or by consent of the party himself. If the legal method has not been employed and the party expressly refuses his consent, an assumption of jurisdiction by the court will be purely arbitrary.—Huff v. Shepard, 58 Mo. 242.

Prerequisites to writ of error to intermediate court

The statutes governing applications for writs of error do not manifest intent to furnish a complete standard for such applications nor to override supreme court rule requiring motion for rehearing to be filed in court of civil appeals as a prerequisite thereto.—Glenn v. McCarty, 110 S.W.2d 1148, 130 Tex. 641, denying rehearing 107 S.W.2d 363, 130 Tex. 641, dismissing application 103 S.W.2d 1098.

Appeal from department of registration

In absence of statute regulating procedure on appeal from order of director of department of registration revoking license of physician and surgeon, supreme court has authority and duty to define procedure.—Baker v. Department of Registration, 3 P.2d 1082, 78 Utah 424.

Land court rule

(1) Rule that no statement other than that in bill of exceptions, that party excepts to ruling, need be filed, was held not invalid as contrary to superior court rule.—Crawford v. Roloson, 160 N.E. 303, 262 Mass. 527.

(2) Land court rule that no other statement of exception to ruling in counsel's absence than that in bill of exceptions need be filed was reasonable.—Crawford v. Roloson, supra.

Supersedeas bonds

A rule of the supreme court, although not requiring every supersedeas bond to be conditioned on payment of condemnation money, does not violate Const. art. 4 § 27, requiring that supersedeas bonds give sufficient security for payment of condemnation money or to abide decree.—Ownbey v. Morgan, Del., 105

A. 838, 7 Boyce, 297, affirming Morgan v. Ownbey, 100 A. 411, 6 Boyce, 379.

Presentation of grounds of review

District court rule, precluding review of sufficiency of evidence, unless request for ruling with specifications of grounds be filed, was within court's power.—Holton v. American Pastry Products Corporation, 174 N.E. 663, 274 Mass. 268.

Exceptions and notice of filing

(1) Circuit court rule, by which all exceptions to adverse rulings from the court are considered saved as a matter of course, the exception to be noted by the reporter transcribing the testimony and to be inserted in the bill of exceptions, is not violative of Rev.St.1919 § 1459, providing that, whenever either party shall except to the opinion of court, and shall write the exception and pray the court to allow and sign it, the court shall sign the bill, if true.—State ex rel. Brockman Mfg. Co. v. Miller, Mo., 241 S.W. 920.

(2) Rule of superior court requiring notice in writing to adverse party of filing of exceptions is within power of court under Rev.Laws c 158 § 3 c 173 § 106; and such rule and practice of dismissal of exceptions for want of compliance therewith does not violate constitutional rights of party whose exceptions are dismissed.—Day v. McClellan, 128 N. E. 412, 236 Mass. 330.

Settling record

Where record cannot be settled in any of the manners provided by Laws 1913 c 178, no court except the supreme court can prescribe any special rule or direction for the settling of the record for the purpose of a new trial or an appeal under § 6 of such act.—Kremer v. Public Drug Co., 168 N.W. 57, 40 S.D. 524.

Presenting report of proceedings at trial

The rules of the supreme court and the court of appeal effective Aug. 1, 1938, providing that report of proceedings at trial shall be presented within fifty days from day notice of appeal is filed instead of within fifty days as was formerly provided, were applicable in action in which notice of appeal was filed Aug. 29, 1938, notwithstanding amendment of rules had not been published in official bound volume of opinions of supreme court, where amendment to rules had been published several times in legal publications of general circulation among lawyers prior to date when notice of appeal was filed.—Stribling v. Grace, Ill.App., 22 N.E.2d 719.

Trial de novo

Court rule requiring litigant on appeal to try case on transcript of evidence, supplemented by oral evidence, does not accord litigant constitutional right to trial de novo.—Dehmer v. Campbell, 180 N.E. 267, 124 Ohio St. 634.

Prohibiting reversal for technical error

Rule prohibiting reversals for technical errors, and requiring appellant to show prejudice from erroneous rulings, when construed so as not to apply to fundamental errors, is constitutional.—Golden v. Odiorne, 249 S.W. 822, 112 Tex. 544.

Contravention of statute

(1) A circuit court rule that no party who fails to have proceedings reported shall be entitled to have a bill of exceptions filed by court could not change or vary terms of general statutes as to bills of exceptions.—Steiner Bros. v. Slifkin, 186 So. 156, 237 Ala. 226.

(2) Court rule requiring mandamus petition to compel certification of bill of exceptions to be filed within twenty days after refusal to certify is in conflict with statute.—Brown v. Hutcheson, 146 S.E. 27, 167 Ga. 451, reversing 144 S.E. 147, 38 Ga.App. 453, conformed to 146 S.E. 329, 39 Ga.App. 99.

(3) Court rule 101a (159 S.W. xi), if it intended to prevent review of record because there was no motion for a new trial, would be inconsistent with legislative enactment, and hence beyond the power of the Supreme Court, the procedure for criminal appeals being prescribed by statute.—Sessions v. State, 197 S. W. 718, 81 Tex.Cr. 424.

Wash.—Nudd v. Fuller, 273 P. 200, 150 Wash. 389.

Wyo.—Snider v. Rhodes, 79 P.2d 481.

Contravention of statute

(1) Rules excluding Sundays and holidays in calculating time provided apply only where the statute is silent, and cannot enlarge the ten days fixed by the statute within which to apply for a writ of error.—Covey v. Williamson, 286 F. 459, 52 App.D.C. 289.

(2) Part of circuit court rule requiring bill of exceptions to be presented within ten days after entry of judgment must yield to statute be given;¹⁸ the form, contents, and time of filing or docketing the transcript or record;¹⁹ the time of filing briefs;²⁰ the form and nature of briefs and arguments;²¹ or the mode of raising points and presenting questions for review.²²

However, any rule of court which deprives a party of his constitutional or statutory right to prosecute an appeal or a writ of error,²³ or which confers a right of appeal in a case where it does not exist at common law or by statute,²⁴ is invalid. Where a statute regulating the procedure on appeal is so uncertain that two interpretations leading to different results are possible, the supreme court is authorized to correct the situation by a rule.²⁵

e. Discretion of Court

A rule which prevents the exercise of a court's discretion is invalid.

Where, according to statute or common law, a certain matter is left to the discretion of the court, a rule which prevents the exercise of such discretion is invalid and cannot be enforced.²⁶

Rule held valid

The supreme court rule requiring that record on appeal be filed in clerk's office within sixty days after filing thereof in district court clerk's office merely interprets and applies statute, requiring latter clerk to transmit record to supreme court clerk if district court grants no new trial within twenty days after filing of specifications of error, and is authorized by statute providing that supreme court may prescribe rules of practice therefor not inconsistent with state constitution or laws.—Snider v. Rhodes, Wyo., 79 P.2d 481.

Contravention of statute

(1) Appeals in quo warranto proceedings are governed by statute, which supersedes court rule requiring that transcript be filed within twenty days after appeal is perfected.—Orndorff v. State ex rel. McGill, Tex.Civ.App., 108 S.W.2d 206, error refused.

(2) The rule of the supreme court that in workmen's compensation cases brief shall be filed within fifteen days after filing petition in error or record on appeal was not invalid as inconsistent with statute providing that record on appeal from compensation award must be filed within seventy days from date of decision and that fifteen days shall be allowed thereafter for filing brief, in view of fact that legislature had met no less than three times since promulgation of rule without altering language of statute and at one session specifically reenacted language of statute.—*Harvey v. Points and propositions

Court rule 53, 128 N.W. xi, requiring a statement of the error to be followed by points and propositions, is not in conflict with Code Suppl. 1913 § 4136, providing that no assignment of error shall be required.—Wine v. Jones, 168 N.W. 318, 183 Iowa 1166, modifying opin-

Rules held invalid

(1) The writ of error provided for in constitution cannot be abolished by supreme court by exercise of its rule making power nor by legislative enactment.—Jones v. Eastern Michigan Motorbuses, supra.

(2) District court rule, to same effect as Rev.St.1908 § 2528, requiring payment of docketing fee on appeal from county court to district court, could not authorize the remitting of a transcript actually docketed without the payment of the fee, since the right of appeal is statutory, and no rule of court can deprive a party of that right.—*Drennen v. Amendments

The county court of Allegheny County is a court of record with all the common-law powers of such a court to allow amendments, and it cannot, by adoption of a general rule, divest itself of the duty to exercise a discretion with which it is by

§ 173. Method of Adoption

- a. In general
- b. Adoption by convention of judges

a. In General

It is usually held that court rules must be promulgated formally and be in writing and adopted of record; but rules resting in parol and established by long practice have been upheld.

It has been laid down that rules of court must be definitely stated, and promulgated formally,²⁷ at least rules framed to guide and govern litigants,²⁸ and should not be in force until after reasonable publicity and notice thereof.²⁹ So it is very generally held that the general rules of practice enacted by the courts must be embodied in writing and adopted of record.³⁰ Nevertheless rules resting in parol and established by a long course of practice have been upheld,³¹ especially in the federal courts, as stated in the C.J.S. title Federal Courts § 96, also law invested.—South Pittsburgh Water Co. v. Winterberger, supra.

27. Ill.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Haskins, 2 N.E. 654, 115 Ill. 300. 15 C.J. p 907 note 86.

Sufficiency of promulgation

While customarily court rules are published in current bar dockets or otherwise, such publication or promulgation is not essential to the enforcement of the rule, which is adopted in open court and which is spread of record on the order book of the court.—State ex rel. Thompson v. Barce, 10 N.E.2d 612, 212 Ind. 595.

Printing and filing copies

In order that rules may be given the necessary publicity, it is frequently provided that they shall be printed and that copies be filed in the office of the clerk.—In re Maxwell, 14 N.Y.S. 658—15 C.J. p 908 note 92.

28. Mo.—State ex rel. Garvey v. Buckner, 272 S.W. 940, 942, 308 Mo. 390, citing Corpus Juris.

Nature of rules distinguished

Formal promulgation should precede effective date of court rules framed to guide and govern litigants, but there is no such requirement in case of rules to aid court in apportionment and dispatch of its business.—State ex rel. Garvey v. Buckner, supra.

Must be recorded

(1) Rules of courts of record cannot rest in parol, but must be placed on court's records.

Utah.—Patton v. Evans, 69 P.2d 969, 970, 92 Utah 524, 112 A.L.R. 589.

"It is a fact well known to bench and bar that trial courts have certain rules of procedure which are not specified in the statute or the canons of the common law, and which may not even be spread upon the record of the court. Yet, they are well understood and observed by both lawyers and judge. For instance, the court has a certain hour for convening and adjourning court each day; a certain hour of the day, or day of the week or term, for calling and hearing the motion docket; the number of times a case will be called before parties are required to make a definite announcement, and the like." —Maloney v. Hunt, 29 Mo.App. 379, 382.

25 C.J. p 827 note 20. So, when necessary, the court may supplement rules previously formulated and printed, by declaring a new rule from the bench to meet a particular situation.³²

Where a rule requiring the filing of a demand for a jury trial had not been enforced, publication of notice that it would be strictly enforced after a specified date corrected the previous delinquency in its enforcement.³³

Failure of court to enact rule as required by mandatory statute does not deprive a litigant complying with the statute of the benefit of the rule.³⁴

b. Adoption by Convention of Judges

In some jurisdictions rules of practice may be adopted by a convention of judges.

In some jurisdictions the judges of the superior courts are authorized to meet in convention at stated periods for the purpose of adopting uniform rules.³⁵ The powers of such a convention are lim-

A long-established practice uniformly followed, especially in federal courts, has the same force and effect as a rule of court where the practice relates to a matter inherent in the case itself or to the mechanics or the form or mode of process and not to a question of judicial courtesy or judicial administration by court of its calendar.—Patton v. Evans, 69 P.2d 969, 92 Utah 524, 112 A.L.R. 589.

Custom declared by judge

Special justice of municipal court is competent to know and declare custom of his own court, and custom so declared is practical equivalent of rule which court has power to make.—Smith v. Tallman, 175 A. 857, 87 N.H. 176.

Notice to creditors of decedent's estate

Statute requiring orphans' courts to provide, by general rule, for giving of actual notice to creditor of estate, who gave written notice of claim to executor or administrator is mandatory, and failure of court to enact rule did not deprive creditor complying with statute of benefits thereof.—In re Shugars' Estate, supra.

Powers conferred

(1) The authority of judges of superior courts to sit in convention and as a convention of judges to estab-

ited to making such rules, in addition to those prescribed by statute, as are necessary,³⁶ which rules must be in harmony with the provisions of the statute,³⁷ in accordance with the principle stated supra § 170 b (1), and the convention is not authorized to alter, modify, or annul any rule of practice established by statute.³⁸

§ 174. Adoption by State of Federal Rules

Under some statutes the rules of practice obtaining in United States equity courts are adopted as rules of practice in the state court; but a federal equity rule conflicting with a local statute must yield thereto.

Under the statutes in some jurisdictions rules of practice in equity courts of the United States are made rules of practice in the state court when exercising equity jurisdiction,³⁹ and such statutes must be construed to apply to all rules and amendments thereof adopted by the supreme court whether before or after their enactment.⁴⁰ In matters not covered by rules, the practice follows that of the high court of chancery in England;⁴¹ but the practice of English chancery courts is inapplicable where a federal rule of practice or a local rule or statute prescribes a different procedure.⁴² A federal equity rule, if in conflict with a local statute governing chancery practice, must yield to the extent of the conflict.⁴³ lish uniform rules of practice is no greater than authority conferred by statute authorizing convention.—Jones v. Boykin, supra.

(2) The general assembly had power to rescind and annul any action which the general assembly might have previously authorized convention of superior court judges to take, since the convention was a creature of statute with authority no greater than was conferred by statute.—Jones v. Boykin, supra.

(3) The fact that at time of adoption of constitution, enumerating powers of the superior courts, and providing that they should have such other powers as were conferred on them by law, a statute was in force authorizing judges of superior courts in convention to prescribe rules of practice, did not confer constitutional power on a convention of superior court judges as distinguished from powers of superior courts, but, even if it did confer power on the convention, it only conferred power contained in statute to make rules of practice.—Jones v. Boykin, supra.

(4) The passage of a rule of practice by judges of superior courts in convention was not the exercise of a "judicial power" within constitution—al provision that judicial powers of state should be vested in courts.—Moyers v. State, 197 S.E. 846, 186 Ga. 446, 116 A.L.R. 981, mandate conformed to 198 S.E. 283, 58 Ga.App. 237.

§ 175. General Nature of Rules

Rules of practice should be general, and be so framed as to promote justice.

Rules of practice must be general,⁴⁴ and should be framed with a view to insuring, so far as possible, just results in all cases, and minimizing the danger of injustice being done to parties in any case.⁴⁵ They should facilitate getting at the real facts in an orderly manner, and should promote, and not impede, the administration of justice.⁴⁶

§ 176. Operation and Effect of Rules

- a. In general
- b. Knowledge of rules
- c. Prospective or retrospective operation

a. In General

Court rules cannot make valid anything which is void in law, nor supersede, change, or interfere with the operation of statutory or other law; but authorized rules have the force of law, are binding on the court and litigants, and must ordinarily be enforced by the court. The rules governing proceedings in a case are those of the court in which the case is pending. In case of conflict between a general and a local rule the former prevails.

A rule of court cannot operate so as to render valid anything which is void in law,⁴⁷ nor can it supersede, nullify, or change statutory or other law,⁴⁸ nor can a rule of court operate so as to

General rules of practice, it has been held, apply only to practice in courts of record.⁵⁶

Time of filing briefs on appeal

Rules of court requiring briefs on appeal to be filed within the time specified confer rights which may be enforced by litigants.—Borgmeyer v. Solomon, 178 P. 544, 39 Cal.App. 106.

Substantial compliance

(1) While courts and all others charged with duty of enforcing law as it is declared should be ever ready to do so, and not to permit immaterial technicalities to obstruct or defeat original public purposes, declared rules of procedure should be substantially followed.—Shipp v. Bradley, 275 S.W. 1, 210 Ky. 51.

(2) Rules of Oklahoma supreme court governing procedure in sale of oil lease on minor's lands must be substantially followed.—Twist v. Prairie Oil & Gas Co., C.C.A.Okl., 27 F.2d 470, vacated per stipulation 28 F.2d 1021.

(3) Assignee of oil lease on minor's lands in disregard of court rule was not entitled to prevail on theory of vested rights under established rule of property.—Twist v. Prairie Oil & Gas Co., supra.

(4) An appellant will not be entitled to a reversal of judgment without at least a substantial observance of court rules.—Poff v. McKillip, Ind. App., 18 N.E.2d 963.

Litigants and their counsel should make a reasonable, diligent, and good-faith effort to comply with rules of court.—United Taxi Co. v. Dilworth, Ind.App., 20 N.E.2d 699.

Effect of noncompliance

(1) When the court has made a rule applicable to a particular matter, and provided what penalty shall be inflicted for noncompliance therewith, it cannot inflict any penalty for violation of the rule except as stated.—State ex rel. Kansas City Light & Power Co. v. Trimble, 237 S.W. 1021, 291 Mo. 532.

(2) Willful or negligent disobedience of rules of appellate procedure may cause supreme court to refuse to consider transcript or brief, or parts of either.—State v. Kacar, 240 P. 365, 74 Mont. 269.

(3) The willful disregard by the trial court of rules 25 and 27, governing trial courts of record, which were established under L.1919 c 163, and are therefore the laws of the state, binding on the courts, and which have demonstrated their value, is misconduct resulting in a mistrial of the action.—Presho State Bank v. Northwestern Milling Co., 185 N.W. 370, 45 S.D. 58, 23 A.L.R. 48, rehearing denied 186 N.W. 560, 45 S.D. 147.

Where plaintiff seeking to invalidate tax sale showed noncompliance with statute requiring county treasurer's report to court and confirmation thereof, plaintiff's failure to comply with county court's rules by filing briefs after filing exceptions to chancellor's finding and conclusions the court to enforce them,⁵⁸ unless the circumstances are such as to warrant and permit their suspension or modification in the particular case, as discussed infra § 178 a, or unless they have been abrogated or amended by the court or by statute, in accordance with the principles stated infra § 179. However, although fixed rules of procedure cannot be disregarded, they should be so administered as to promote, rather than hinder, trials on their merits, if this can be done without violence to the rules.⁵⁹ In some jurisdictions it has been said to be the policy of the supreme court to be liberal in the application of its rules until the bench and bar have had a reasonable time to become familiar therewith.⁶⁰ Parties and attorneys are justified in presuming that the rules of court will be enforced, and are not chargeable with negligence in relying upon this presumption and acting accordingly.⁶¹ The method of enforcement rests in the discretion of the court if the rule itself does not provide a method or penalty.⁶²

There is a distinction, however, between mandatory and directory rules; a mandatory rule which limits the power of the court as well as the parties must be complied with, and acts not complying therewith are void;⁶³ but where a rule is merely

(2) Such rules cannot be abrogated or disregarded by the trial judge, see infra § 178.

directory it does not render the doing of a prescribed act at a different time or in a different manner void.⁶⁴

Failure to follow the procedure laid down by a court rule does not necessarily deprive the court of jurisdiction.⁶⁵

Rules established by the judge of a court for the regulation of the proceedings in such court become the rules of the court,⁶⁶ and remain so until abrogated or superseded by the judge who established them,⁶⁷ or his successor in office.⁶⁸ It has been held, however, that rules promulgated by judges for the apportionment of business are binding only on the judges and not on the court or on the successors of the judges.⁶⁹

What rules govern. The rules governing the proceedings in a case are the rules of the court in which the case is pending at the time the proceedings were taken.⁷⁰ Where, prior to the adoption of rules regulating appellate procedure, final judgment had been entered on a pending action, but an appeal was not taken until after the date on which the rules were to become effective, the procedure on the appeal was governed by the rules so adopted.⁷¹ In case of a conflict between a general rule and a local rule, the general rule prevails.⁷²

b. Knowledge of Rules

Parties and their counsel are bound to take notice of court rules, and ignorance thereof ordinarily is no excuse for noncompliance therewith.

Attorneys practicing before a court,⁷³ regardless of whether they reside in the same county or not,⁷⁴ and the parties to actions therein⁷⁵ are bound to take notice of the duly-adopted and promulgated rule of such court, and ignorance of a rule ordinarily is no excuse for noncompliance therewith; but special circumstances may excuse ignorance of a rule.⁷⁶

c. Prospective or Retrospective Operation

Court rules ordinarily operate prospectively only, and should not be made retrospective.

While the general rule is that rules of court must be held to operate prospectively only,⁷⁷ a rule may be made to operate on actions pending at the time of its adoption by manifesting such intent;⁷⁸ and it has also been held that a rule which relates only to procedure and in no way affects rights of the parties is applicable to future procedure in pending litigation,⁷⁹ although such a rule does not enlarge the effect of pleadings filed prior to their enactment.⁸⁰ On the other hand, it has been held that rules of court should not be retrospective in their terms.⁸¹

been out of use for a number of years, it was held that, although the old rules of practice in that court were also restored, the ignorance of an attorney regarding the necessity of an affidavit of defense might be excused under the circumstances, where he offered to furnish the required affidavit as soon as he learned of the rule.—*Sterling v. Right to jury trial

Supreme court rule requiring party desiring jury trial on appeal from justice of peace to make written demand therefor could not be considered by appellate court in determining right to jury trial in case appealed from justice of peace, where case had been tried before supreme court rule became effective.—North American Provision Co. v. Kinman, 6 N.E.2d 235, 288 Ill.App. 414.

Procedure on appeal

Where supreme court rule relating to the record on appeal was amended after judgment was entered in trial court and notice of appeal was filed, the procedure on appeal must be determined according to the rule in effect at the time judgment was entered in the trial court.—Rose v. Meyer, 18 N.E.2d 184, 370 Ill. 166.

Effect of amendment of rule

(1) Where application for writ of error was filed and case was submitted before amendment of rule omitting requirement that application state that the particular decision or ruling sought to be reviewed was assigned as error in motion for rehearing in court of civil appeals, sufficiency of application must be determined according to rule before amendment.—Robinson v. Commercial Standard Ins. Co., Tex.Com.App., 123 S.W.2d 337, reversing Commercial Standard Ins. Co. v. Robinson, Civ. App., 91 S.W.2d 1147.

(2) Where application for writ of error was filed prior to amendment deleting from rule portion thereof requiring that application for writ state that the particular decision or ruling sought to be reviewed was assigned as error in the motion for rehearing in court of civil appeals, application omitting such statement was improvidently granted and application was subject to dismissal.—*Texas Employers Ins. a. Power to Construe

The construction of court rules is for the court which enunciates them, and its conclusion will not ordinarily be revised in the absence of a clear abuse of power or manifest error.

The construction of court rules is for the court which enunciates them,⁸² and while it has been held that such construction is not final, but is subject to revision by an appellate court,⁸³ the general rule is that a court's construction of its own rules will not be interfered with by a higher court⁸⁴ in the absence of a clear abuse of power or manifest and material error,⁸⁵ such as a construction which violates the plain terms of the rule or of some organic or statutory law.⁸⁶

b. Rules of Construction

Court rules, especially those which are for the convenience of the court, should be liberally construed, although a strict construction will be given to rules intended for the protection of the rights of the parties.

Rules should be construed in harmony with statutes relating to the same matter, and different rules as to particular practice should be construed together.

Rules which are enacted by virtue of constitutional or statutory authority, and which are mandatory in their terms, should be construed in the same manner as statutes,⁸⁷ because they have the force and operation of a statute, as stated supra § 176 a. Strict interpretation will be given to provisions that are aimed to protect the rights of the parties;⁸⁸ but provisions intended only for the convenience of, and aid to, the court should be liberally construed.⁸⁹ A rule having reference to the public good should not receive a strict or narrow construction;⁹⁰ and it has been held with reference to court rules generally that they should not be construed too strictly or literally,⁹¹ but should be liberally and reasonably construed so as to promote rather than defeat justice.⁹² They will not, however, be construed so as to favor a negligent, and penalize a diligent, party.⁹³ Rules of court apply to all persons, cases, and representatives of clients alike, and must be construed in one case just as they have been or will be in another, irrespective of the case, the parties, or their counsel.⁹⁴

In determining whether a rule made pursuant to constitutional and statutory authority is mandatory or directory, the court will apply the same rules of construction that are applicable to constitutions and statutes.⁹⁵ A rule will be construed as directory merely, where another construction would work a denial of practice.⁹⁶

Court rules must also be construed with due regard to the reason on which they rest, and so as to promote the objects which their framers had in view in adopting them,⁹⁷ and so as not to interfere with fundamental rights.⁹⁸

A rule of court, not limited by its terms to actions at law, must also be applied to actions in equity,⁹⁹ and even though a rule does not in terms relate to criminal cases, it may be adopted in such cases by analogy when applicable.¹

Construction with reference to statutes. Court rules should, if possible, be construed in the light of and in harmony with statutes relating to the same matter,³ and in view of constitutional or statutory limitations on the power of the court,⁴ and should not be so construed as to subordinate the statute to the rule.⁵ A special rule adopting the provisions of a repealed statute will be given the mandatory character which the statute had previously received.⁶

Repealed statute

Provisions of court rule following substantially language theretofore used in repealed law are to be interpreted in same manner.—People v. Malone, 2 P.2d 332, 213 Cal. 406.

Where supreme court in preparing rule adopted language of a statute which had not been construed, court will construe statute and give rule same construction.—Hess & Skinner Engineering Co. v. Rules held not in conflict

Rule requiring pleadings and other papers presented to court of chancery to be marked filed and forwarded to clerk was not in conflict with rule requiring solicitor to pay filing fees before clerk shall file paper.—In re S——, 169 A. 679, 115 N.J. Eq. 186.

Divisions of circuit court

(1) Rules adopted by circuit judges of a circuit court dividing court into divisions and providing that, when judge is absent or assigned for trial work, he shall give such his exclusive time, did not affect constitutional jurisdiction of each circuit judge in judicial circuit.—City of Coral Gables v. Blount, 178 So. 554, 131 Fla. 36.

(2) Although the circuit court of a city may be separated into many divisions, it is nevertheless one court, and where parties stipulated in the supreme court for reversal of a circuit court ruling the remanding mandate thereon went to the circuit court and not to a division thereof, and Circuit Court Rules, rule 4 subd S, that a mandate shall go to the division which tried the case and from which it was appealed is only a procedural rule facilitating its disposition.—Hargadine-McKittrick Dry Goods Co. v. Garesche, Mo., 227 S. W. 824.

Indorsement of garnishee summons

Rule of Chicago municipal court requiring indorsement on copy of garnishee summons, left with garnishee, of defendant's business, business address, and residence address, but not providing that failure to comply therewith should be jurisdictional or require quashing of the summons or discharge of the garnishee or even requiring that return of the summons show compliance with such rule, did not of itself require granting of a motion to quash summons for noncompliance.—Chicago City Bank & Trust Co. v. Kaplan, 281 Ill.App. 97.

Pleadings

A rule of court providing that in all actions not specifically provided for by the Practice Act of 1915, 12

P.S. § 382 et seq, the pleadings shall conform to the requirements thereof as nearly as possible, means only that the pleadings shall conform to such requirement as those relating to conciseness, numbered paragraphs each containing but one material allegation, pleading evidence or conclusions of law, attaching copies of writings relied on, proper form of denials, verification, etc., and is not intended to provide what the pleadings shall consist of or what the practice shall be.—Carlisle Deposit Bank & Trust Co. v. Hoffer, 35 Pa. Dist. & Co. 157.

Taking depositions

Supreme court rule relating to taking of depositions, although same as statute, is intended to make definite and simplify practice, and is not to be presumed to limit statutes relating to same subject matter, but is to be considered supplementary.—American Fruit Growers v. Calvert, 56 P. 2d 1307, 186 Wash. 29, rehearing denied and modified on other grounds 59 P.2d 747, 186 Wash. 29.

Inspection of books, papers, or documents

Rule authorizing chancellor to direct inspection of "any books, papers or documents" does not authorize party to pry into records of stranger.—McCarter v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 147 A. 785, 105 N.J.Eq. 322.

Service of papers

A circuit court rule requiring copies of papers filed in a cause to be served on attorney of adverse party whenever such party had appeared by attorney did not apply to orders entered pursuant to oral motions or oral applications.—State ex rel. Kaser v. Leonard, Or., 94 P.2d 1113.

Modes of review

Supreme court rule providing for review by notice of appeal, designated an "appeal", did not destroy former writs in terming them appeals.—Attorney General v. Lane, 243 N.W. 6, 259 Mich. 283, certiorari denied Lane v. Voorhies, 53 S.Ct. 115, 287 U.S. 654, 77 L.Ed. 565.

Notice of appeal

Court rule which provided for service and filing of notice of appeal in criminal cases within five days after entry of order appealed from a state supreme court, making "rules" governing comments by district judges on evidence those in force in the United States district courts, the word "rules" was held to mean the practice, procedure, custom, method, and/or system prevailing in such federal courts.⁹

§ 178. Suspension or Modification in Particular Cases

- a. Power of court
- b. Consent, stipulation, or waiver by parties or counsel

a. Power of Court

While some authorities hold that a court has no power to suspend or modify its rules in a particular case, others hold that a court may exercise such power when justice so requires. When the rule is not mandatory, required dismissal of state's appeal from an order vacating order of forfeiture of cash bail where notice of appeal was not given within specified time, as against contention that order was an adjudication of civil character and that rule relating to appeals in civil cases was applicable.—State v. Knizek, 72 P.2d 310, 192 Wash. 34.

Time of filing briefs

Dauphin County Court Rules, rule No. 58A, relating to the time of filing briefs applies both to cases where there has been an oral argument, and to those where the matter has been submitted on briefs.—Weiser v. Michlovitz, 46 Dauph.Co., Pa., 385.

Supreme Court rules regarding submission of causes apply to case presented to supreme court, on rule to show cause, since court rules apply to any cause unless they are relaxed or dispensed with by supreme court.—Ash v. Cohn, 3 A.2d 130, 121 N.J.Law 412.

but is merely directory and for the convenience of the court, it may be disregarded by the court. Ordinarily, a court cannot abrogate or suspend rules prescribed for it by a higher court, nor can rules made by a lower court be suspended by a higher court. Rules adopted by the court as such cannot be disregarded by a single judge.

There are numerous cases which declare that rules of court should be adhered to both by parties litigant and the court, in all cases which fall within them, as long as they remain in force, and that the court has no power in a particular case, where no discretion is reserved, to suspend or to modify any rule which it has made.¹⁰ On the other hand, there is abundant authority in support of the view that rules of court are but a means to accomplish the ends of justice, and that the court has the power to modify, suspend, or rescind its own rules whenever justice requires it,¹¹ at least where no party

"Courts are reluctant to give effect to rules of procedure which seem harsh and unfair and which prevent a litigant from having his claim adjudicated upon its merits."—Stapp v. Andrews, 113 S.W.2d 749, 750, 172 Tenn. 610.

Rules of practice are for purpose of aiding in speedy determination of causes, while the courts are established for the higher purpose of the administration of practice, and, where the strict enforcement of the letter of a rule would tend to prevent or jeopardize the administration of justice, the rule must yield to the higher purpose, and be relaxed by the court.—Vilsack v. General Commercial Securities Corporation, 143 So. 250, 106 Fla. 296—Baker-Lewis Const. Co. v. Midyette, 141 So. 534, 105 Fla. 502—*Edwards v. Trial court has wide power to determine whether rules are to be rigidly enforced, or even to suspend rules when its action does not prejudice party seeking to invoke rules—McFadden v. Pennzoil Co., 191 A. 584, 326 Pa. 277.

is prejudiced thereby;¹² and even if, under some circumstances, a declaration may be stricken for failure to comply with a rule of court, it should not be when it would work manifest injustice.¹³ This conflict of authority is, however, more apparent than real, for while the cases do not always bring out the distinction clearly, the general tendency appears to be toward an opinion that the power of a court to modify or suspend its rules in particular cases depends largely on the character of the rule, the principle being that rules which are merely directory, or which are prescribed solely for the governance of attorneys and the convenience of the court, may be dispensed with when the ends of justice so require, but rules which are mandatory must never be dispensed with in an arbitrary manner in cases where it will operate to the prejudice of the parties, or tend to unsettle the established practice of the court.¹⁴

Deference for a valid act of the general assembly, clearly requires that the court of appeals exert its own power to make the act effective, even though in doing so the court contravenes a rule of practice generally accepted as binding.—Burton v. Mayer, 118 S.W.2d 547, 274 Ky. 263.

Vice chancellor may relax or dispense with rules of practice after he has acquired jurisdiction; but where strict adherence thereto would work surprise or injustice he cannot dispense with rule for purpose of acquiring jurisdiction.—Scranton But- ton Co. v. Neonlite Corporation of America, 149 A. 369, 105 N.J.Eq. 708.

Discretion of court

(1) The summary and equitable jurisdiction of a court of law so to control its own process and proceedings as not to produce hardship is a matter of grace or discretion, and not of right, where the proceedings have been regular, and is characterized by the imposition of terms on the party to whom concession is made.—Ownbey v. Morgan, 41 S.Ct. 433, 256 U.S. 94, 65 L.Ed. 337, 17 A.L.R. 873, affirming 105 A. 838, 7 Boyce, Del., 297.

(2) The district court of appeal will not in all cases enforce its rules but will retain discretion in exacting compliance.—In re Paterson's Estate, Cal.App., 76 P.2d 138.

(3) Whether court will deviate from court rules fixing law day is matter of discretion.—Elsom v. Tefft, 268 P. 177, 148 Wash. 195, appeal dismissed Tefft v. Grant, 49 S.Ct. 479, 279 U.S. 324, 73 L.Ed. 977.

On rare occasions, and in the interest of justice, rule of supreme court that in special proceedings only questions of law will be considered may be waived by court.—State ex rel. Helena Allied Printing Council v. Mitchell, 74 P.2d 417, 105 Mont. 326.

When rule not waived by court

While the court may, upon a proper showing, waive the requirements of its own rules, it will not waive the requirement of Rules of Court, rule 27, which provides that "in no case will the Court receive written, without oral, argument," in a case of importance involving an indictment charging violation of the Pennsylvania

General Food Law.—Commonwealth v. Richards, 29 Berks Co.L.J., Pa., 319.

Burden of showing waiver by court is on one asserting waiver.—Esch v. Forster, 127 So. 336, 99 Fla. 717.

In Illinois it has been held that:

(1) Court rules may be disregarded by judges for good cause and where no material harm is done to accused.—People v. Davis, 192 N.E. 210, 357 Ill. 396.

(2) Court rules not violating constitution or statute are binding on judges, court officers, and litigants, unless in particular case judge for good cause may disregard them.—People v. Feinberg, 181 N.E. 437, 348 Ill. 549.

(3) A court of review will not vary the application or interpretation of the rules regarding taking of an appeal to suit the contingencies of a particular case.—Lewis v. Renfro, 9 N.E.2d 652, 291 Ill.App. 396.—Bender v. Alton R. Co., 1 N.E.2d 108, 284 Ill.App. 419.

In Iowa it has been held that:

(1) Supreme court may, under some circumstances, waive its own rules.—Farmers' State Sav. Bank of Promise City v. Miles, 221 N.W. 449, 206 Iowa 776.

(2) But it cannot do so where the matter sought to be obviated is statutory, and where the rules with respect to the subject merely conform to the statute.—Arends v. Frerichs, 186 N.W. 457, 192 Iowa 1313, dismissing petition 184 N.W. 650, 192 Iowa 285.

In Texas

(1) The court of civil appeals has the right to enforce its rules within such limitation as justice may require.—Rowntree v. Peck Furniture Co., Com.App., 248 S.W. 26.

(2) But it has also been held that, while a reviewing court is loath to deprive litigant of complete opportunity to present every proposition deemed by him important to his rights, it is bound by rules of procedure, and may not suspend them.—Roesser v. Coffey, Tex.Civ.App., 98 S.W.2d 275.

Place where motions should be made

The rules that have been adopted by the supreme court prescribing the motions and applications that are to be made to the different parts of the court were not intended to embrace motions or applications in criminal actions.—People ex rel. Newton v. Special Term, Part 1, Supreme Court New York County, 184 N.Y.S. 193, 193 App.Div. 463.

Character of rules distinguished

(1) "There is, of course, a wide difference in the character of the various rules of courts. Some are intended merely to produce regularity and order in court proceedings. Rules of appellate courts as to the form of briefs, etc., such rules may well be placed as directory only. There is another class, such as the one under consideration, which stands as notice to all litigants that the court will not act until a certain time, or until certain prior steps are taken. To disregard such rules would be the very opposite of the promotion of justice."—Holbert v. Patrick, 176 P. 903, 904, 74 Okl. 290.

(2) Accordingly, it has been held that, where rule of district court provides that demurrer and motions shall only be heard on certain days, the court, without agreement of counsel, cannot disregard the rule and hear a demurrer prior to day it would regularly come on for hearing.—Holbert v. Patrick, supra.

(3) On the other hand, it has been held that where district court adopts rule requiring journal entry of judgment to be signed by counsel for both plaintiff and defendant enforcement of rule is discretionary.—McAleer v. Waddell-O'Brien Motor Co., 231 P. 480, 105 Okl. 35.

When the rules of a court are prescribed by a higher court under a statute, discussed supra § 170 b (2), the court for which such rules are prescribed has no authority to modify, abrogate, or suspend the same;¹⁵ but where a rule prescribed by a court of last resort to regulate proceedings in an intermediate appellate court in effect precludes the latter court from exercising judicial functions in a matter in which its jurisdiction is properly invoked, the rule may be disregarded on sufficient excuse, within the discretion of the intermediate court.¹⁶ On the other hand, where a lower court has the power to make its own rules, they cannot be suspended by a higher court in a particular case,¹⁷ except in the manner provided by such rules.¹⁸

Leave of court. A litigant desiring the relaxation of a court rule may be required to obtain leave of court,¹⁹ and the application will be refused unless strong reasons are presented in its favor.²⁰ serve notice of appeal from a magistrate's court will not be enforced where appellee's attorney had actual notice of the appeal and entered a general appearance.—Konheim v. Pomeroy's, Inc., 22 Pa.Dist. & Co. 129.

Mandatory rule affecting substantial rights

(1) Such a rule cannot be waived by court.—U. S. v. Minkus, 16 Ct. Cust.App. 263.

(2) A rule of court that in divorce proceedings, after testimony has been taken, the case shall be placed upon the argument list, is mandatory; the rule affects the respondent's rights and, until abrogated, is in force and cannot be disregarded by the court.—Fisher v. Fisher, 74 Pa. Super. 538.

Rules not essential for protection of substantial rights of litigants must give way to rules not impeding justice.—City of Milwaukee v. Johnson, 213 N.W. 335, 192 Wis. 585.

Deprivation of rights

Where court in rendering default judgment disregards court rules, depriving party of trial, judgment is erroneous.—Ramsey v. Holland, 172 N.E. 411, 35 Ohio App. 199.

Equity rules

(1) Equity rules are the rules of all the courts, to be enforced as of course in all of them, and not relaxed or disregarded as matter of mere indulgence or convenience.—Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. v. Tremont Tp. School Dist., 5 Schuylkill Reg., Pa., 259.

(2) Court cannot expedite unduly a proceeding in violation of equity rules.—Mintzer v. Turnbach, 172 A. 162, 113 Pa.Super. 113.

Important question involved

Where question raised by appeal was one theretofore not decided in the state, and respondents had not been misled nor prejudiced by appellants' alleged noncompliance with rules nor appellate court inconvenienced thereby, appeal was considered on its merits rather than dismissed for such noncompliance.—In re Paterson's Estate, Cal.App., 76 P. 2d 138.

Time for filing pleadings

Valid court rule, made in particular case, fixing time within which pleadings must be filed, is not obligatory on court, but may be enforced where enforcement does not deny defendant reasonable opportunity to exercise legal rights.—Uerling v. State, 250 N.W. 243, 125 Neb. 374.

Time for filing transcript

Supreme court rule limiting time for filing transcript was held not of character requiring its suspension or waiver to promote justice.—Sullivan v. Nevada Industrial Commission, 14 P.2d 262, 54 Nev. 301.

b. Consent, Stipulation, or Waiver by Parties or Counsel

Although it has been held that court rules cannot be abrogated by agreement of the parties or their counsel, there is authority to the effect that a party or his counsel may consent to the suspension of a rule, or may waive the benefit thereof.

Where rules are prescribed by a court, no unqualified right exists in parties to stipulate for the abrogation of the same,²³ and it has been held that court rules cannot be abrogated by agreement of the parties or their counsel,²⁴ and that mandatory rules for trial courts, promulgated under the express direction of the legislature cannot be waived by a party, even with the consent of the court.²⁵ On the other hand it has been held that, where a party who is entitled to insist on the observance of a rule consents to its suspension,²⁶ or waives the benefit thereof, either expressly or by his conduct,²⁷ its requirements may be dispensed with, although it is otherwise where the rule is made for the benefit of the public or the protection of the court, and not for the benefit of litigants.²⁸ In any event a mandatory rule cannot be waived by a litigant if the waiver affects a substantial right.²⁹

§ 179. Amendment, Repeal, or Abolition

a. By Courts

A court may, by formal action, amend or abolish its rules. Amendments of such rules ordinarily operate prospectively only, although it has been held that if an amendment relates only to foreclosure it may affect pending actions.

manner,³² and it has been held that a court cannot abolish or modify its rules in vacation,³³ or by orders resting in parol.³⁴ Amendments to rules operate prospectively,³⁵ and their effect is in general the same as that of amendments to statutes;³⁶ but it has been held that an amendment of rules relating only to procedure generally affects pending actions.³⁷

A change in rules does not abrogate a preëxisting practice which was not dependent on written rules.³⁸ Such practice, although established by long-continued usage, should not be departed from suddenly, without notice, and to the injury of litigants.³⁹ Neither can a formally-adopted written rule of procedure be nullified by a custom.⁴⁰ A rule of court is not repealed or modified by a subsequent rule which makes no mention of the matter to which the previous rule relates, and which is not inconsistent with the previous rule.⁴¹

Where part of a rule remains unchanged, it is considered as having continued in force from the time of its original establishment,⁴² and the new or changed portion is considered as having become operative only at the time of its adoption.⁴³

b. By Statute

A rule of court may be amended or repealed by statute.

Where the authority exists in the legislature to regulate the practice and procedure in courts, the rules of a court may be amended, rescinded, or repealed by statute.⁴⁴ A rule of court is rendered inoperative by the enactment of a statute inconsistent therewith,⁴⁵ and when a statute is repealed all rules of court which derive their validity therefrom are rendered inoperative.⁴⁶ The enactment of a statute authorizing the court to make certain rules does not abolish the common-law power of said court to adopt rules, and rules previously adopted remain in force until new rules are made under the statute.⁴⁷ A mere change in the number of judges assigned to hold a court,⁴⁸ or in the number of a judicial district, otherwise left unchanged,⁴⁹ does not abrogate rules previously existing in such court of district.

§ 180. Record and Evidence of Rules

The court records are the only competent evidence of the existence of a rule of court, and such existence will not be presumed. The nonexistence of a particular rule must be shown by the testimony of the clerk of the court.

Striking cause from calendar

Municipal court rule dealing with right to strike cause from trial calendar on failure to comply with demand for bill of particulars was rescinded by enactment of section of civil practice act giving appellate division power to regulate practice pertaining to bills of particulars and by statute providing that procedure for obtaining bill of particulars should be that prescribed in civil practice act and rules adopted pursuant thereto, and hence granting of motion to strike action from calendar under municipal court rule after such statutes had become effective was error.—I. & B. Upholstering Co. v. Kresel, 300 N.Y.S. 549, 252 App.Div. 577.

Effect of repeal

Rule of chancery practice repealed by civil practice act was inapplicable in suit in which taking of evidence did not begin before Jan. 1, 1934.—Strickland v. Washington Bldg. Corporation, 4 N.E.2d 973, 287 Ill.App. 340.

cannot be shown by affidavit;⁵¹ nor will its existence be presumed.⁵² The nonexistence of a particular rule must be proved by the testimony of the clerk of the court,⁵³ and an affidavit of counsel that there is no rule relating to a particular matter does not establish the nonexistence of such rule.⁵⁴ Under a rule of the supreme court that such rules as may be adopted by the courts shall be published in a volume next succeeding their adoption, the official publication of the rules is not confined to an official bound volume of the opinion of the supreme court.⁵⁵

VI. RULES OF ADJUDICATION, DECISIONS, AND OPINIONS

A. MODE AND PRINCIPLES OF ADJUDICATION

§ 181. In General

- a. Definitions
- b. General rules

a. Definitions

The term "decision" means, strictly speaking the judgment in a case; but it has been variously applied to orders, reports of opinions, findings of fact, and conclusions of law, and other judicial determinations. An "opinion" is distinguished from a "decision" as being a statement of the reasons for the judgment. A "ruling" is a settlement or exposition of law without necessarily the force of a judgment or order.

A "decision" or "judicial decision" means, strictly speaking, the last act of the court,⁵⁶ or, in other words, the judgment⁵⁷ or conclusion.⁵⁸ It may be a final judgment,⁵⁹ or an adjudication other than a final one;⁶⁰ it may be of intermediate matters, or of questions finally disposing of the case.⁶¹ It may apply with equal force to actions and special proceedings,⁶² or to a mere judicial determination.⁶³ Further, the term "decision" or "judicial decision" has been applied to, or held to mean, orders,⁶⁴ such as an order in a summary proceeding,⁶⁵ the reports or accounts of the opinions or judicial determinations of the courts,⁶⁶ the result when any issue or issues under the pleadings are tried, submitted, and decided by the court,⁶⁷ the resolution of the principles which determine a controversy,⁶⁸ an adjudication of a question submitted to the court,⁶⁹ and the Action by court of last resort not necessary

Inclusion in judgment roll

"The decision, which is, in effect, . . . an 'order' for judgment, is both an 'order' and a 'paper' involving the essential merits, and one which necessarily not only 'affects' the judgment, but actually determines the judgment to be entered," so as to require inclusion in the judgment roll.—Garr v. result of the deliberations of a tribunal.⁷⁰

Although a decision has been said to be the announcement by the court of its judgment, as distinct from the findings,⁷¹ other cases have applied the term "decision" to the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court,⁷² and also simply to its conclusions,⁷³ findings,⁷⁴ or special findings,⁷⁵ of fact. When used in the latter sense, it is to be distinguished from judgment, as indicated in the C. J.S. title Judgments § 4, also 33 C.J. p 1052 note 33 —p 1053 note 40.

Judicial decision has been further said to be the declaration of what the law is, and not what it shall hereafter be,⁷⁶ and the application by a court of competent jurisdiction of the law to a state of facts proved or admitted to be true, and a declaration of the consequences which follow.⁷⁷

Questions as to what constitutes a decision which is reviewable are discussed in Appeal and Error §§ 46-166.

A decision upon the merits has been said to be a decision upon the justice of the cause, and not upon technical grounds only, the real or substantial grounds of the action in distinction from technical or collateral matter.⁷⁸

A final decision is one decisive of the cause.⁷⁹

Opinion. Although the terms "decision" and "opinion" have sometimes been considered to have, or treated as having, the same meaning,⁸⁰ they are generally to be distinguished,⁸¹ in that the decision of the court is its judgment, while the opinion is a statement of the reasons on which the judgment rests.⁸²

"Ruling" has been defined as a settlement or decision of a point of law arising from the trial of a case, without necessarily the force and solemnity of a judgment or order.⁸³ "Rulings" have been held to mean expositions of the law or the legal reasons on which courts rested their judgment on questions presented or issues raised.⁸⁴

In rendering decisions, courts must apply the governing principles of law, regardless of special inconveniences, extraneous influences, or the agreement of the parties as to the applicable principles, and must avoid absurd or patently unjust results.

The business of a court is confined to giving decisions in causes properly before it.⁸⁵ In rendering their decisions, courts must look beyond the particular case to the governing principle and apply it to the facts,⁸⁶ regardless of temporary or special inconveniences⁸⁷ or extraneous influences;⁸⁸ but courts do not seek to fit cases into an abstract formula,⁸⁹ and should not subordinate a rule of conduct of a whole people, long prevailing and acted on in their dealings, to mere consistency of legal principles,⁹⁰ or permit an absurd or patently unjust result to be reached.⁹¹

Effect of decision on right to appeal. Ordinarily a court cannot allow its decisions to be influenced by the consideration that a decision one way instead of another may cut off a party from an appeal;⁹² and a fortiori, where the system of judicature contemplates that a court of intermediate appeal shall be the ultimate tribunal in cases of a certain character, such a court will not render a pro forma decision merely for the purpose of advancing such a case to another forum.⁹³ However, where two cases in a court of last resort appeared to be in irreconcilable conflict as to the right to maintain a bill, a demurrer to such bill was sustained so that a speedy determination of the right might be obtained.⁹⁴

Agreement of parties. A court will not be bound by an agreement of the parties with respect to the principles on which a cause is to be determined.⁹⁵

Legal and equitable principles. In administering justice according to fixed rules of law and procedure, courts should be aided, where proper and necessary, by established and governing principles relating to equity jurisprudence.⁹⁶ A statute may permit courts to apply both legal and equitable remedies in determining actions;⁹⁷ but a statutory provision permitting the rendition of such judgment as substantial justice shall require means substantial legal justice determined by fixed rules and positive statutes, and not the abstract, varying notions of equity entertained by each individual.⁹⁸

Absence of precedent. In determining a question without the guidance of precedent in the same state, a court must adopt the rule which agrees with the habits and customs of the people, and which will in the majority of cases be conducive to a settlement of disputes according to right.⁹⁹ The absence of reported judgments and decisions sustaining an alleged liability, or a particular procedure, raises a strong presumption or is persuasive, that no such liability or procedure is recognized.¹ However, it has been declared that the courts are not bound to find legislative authority or the authority of the other cases stating the same facts before they can declare the law in a new aggregation of facts.²

§ 182. Questions to Be Decided

A court will decide only the questions necessary for determining the particular case presented, and will pass on a question not raised by the parties if determinative of the case.

As a general rule, a court will decide only such questions as are necessary for a determination of the case presented for its consideration, and will not render decisions in advance of such presentation,³ particularly when entering upon a new field of law in the construction of a statute,⁴ or, as appears in Constitutional Law § 94, when considering constitutional questions. Courts deal with cases upon the basis of the facts disclosed, and never with nonexistent and assumed circumstances.⁵

A court will pass upon a question not raised by the parties if it is fundamental and determinative of the case;⁶ but in an original proceeding in mandamus it was held that the court would not examine or rule on propositions not controverted in respondent's brief.⁷

§ 183. Number of Judges Necessary to Adjudication

- a. In general
- b. Death, disqualification, retirement, or absence of a judge

a. In General

As a general rule, a majority of a court constitutes a quorum; but authority to hold court may be vested in one or all of the judges or a prescribed number. A judgment by fewer judges than the number required is a nullity or voidable.

Reasons for rule

(1) "This rule has a tendency to exclude obiter, it points the distinction between a legal treatise on a general head of the law, and a judicial opinion on a concrete case, and it saves trouble to those judges who come after us and are called to decide the question as vital and turning in some appeal."—*West v. Majority of entire court

Under a constitutional provision that an appellate court "shall consist of the Chancellor, the justices of the Supreme Court, and six judges, or a major part of them," a majority of all the members is required for a constitutional quorum; in such case, if a majority of the court is disqualified, an appeal cannot be heard until changes in the court permit assembling of such quorum.—In re Hudson County, 144 A. 169, 106 N.J. Quorum of a division

A statute providing that a court "shall sit in divisions of three judges each, but two judges shall constitute a quorum of a division" is constitutional; and a decision by a division, or a majority thereof, is a decision of the court.—*Joseph v. Writ of error

Circuit court on writ of error to review judgment may be composed of one circuit judge.—Meyer v. Nator Holding Co., 136 So. 636, 102 Fla. 689.

Hearing of exceptions

Nonresident judge who tried a case should sit as member of court in banc to hear exceptions, but should not alone compose such court, unless absolutely necessary.—Stone v. New Schiller Building & Loan Ass'n, 142 A. 293, 293 Pa. 161.

Examination by "court" in confession of murder

Authority to decide either way required

Where, to reverse a judgment on the weight of evidence, the unanimous consent of the court is required, the court may not, when composed of less than the full bench, hear and determine such assignment, since jurisdiction may be exercised only by a court having authority to decide either way; and an appellant urging such ground is entitled to a determination by a court composed of all the judges, notwithstanding a statute permitting a lesser number to form a quorum or to render an order, judgment, or decree.—Neff v. McKelvey, 15 N.E.2d 770, 134 Ohio St. 47.

Hearing on exceptions; application for new trial

(1) In passing on exceptions, a nonresident judge who tried a case should sit as a member of the court in banc, where resident judges are disqualified, but should not alone compose such court unless absolutely necessary.—Stone v. New Schiller Building & Loan Ass'n, 142 A. 293, 293 Pa. 161.—Carney v. Penn Oil Co., 137 A. 799, 289 Pa. 588.

(3) Where bench consists of two members, both must sit in banc to quired for a decision on constitutional questions.¹³

In the absence of express law or long continued usage requiring a specified number of judges, any number determined by necessity or convenience are competent to hold court.¹⁴ Where a constitution or statute specifies that a particular number of judges shall constitute a quorum, litigants are not entitled of right to a hearing by a greater number.¹⁵ In the absence of the quorum or number required by law to hold court, a judgment rendered by the remaining judges will be regarded as a nullity,¹⁶ or as voidable,¹⁷ since in such case there is no authority to render a judgment.

*The record should show that the requisite number of judges were present.*¹⁸

b. Death, Disqualification, Retirement, or Absence of a Judge

The death, disqualification, retirement, or absence of a judge will not ordinarily prevent the other members of the court from transacting its business, if the required number of judges remains, despite provisions for designating judges to replace those incapacitated.

As a general rule, and in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions to the contrary, the death, disqualification, retirement, or absence of a judge will not deprive the other judges of authority to hold court and exercise all its functions, provided the number of judges legally required for the transaction of business remains.¹⁹ This rule is not changed by provisions for the designation of judges to take the place of others who may be incapacitated;²⁰ but such provisions will permit a quorum to be made up where it would otherwise be lacking.²¹

The fact that disqualifications were unknown until after the rendition of a decision does not necessarily require a rehearing;²² and, a fortiori, rehear-consider applications for new trial and judgment non obstante veredicto.—Zimmerman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 142 A. 220, 293 Pa. 264.

Expression of scope of decisions

"Court in banc . . . alone has the power to speak authoritatively concerning the scope and effect of its own decisions."—State ex rel. Talbott v. Shain, 66 S.W.2d 826, 827, 334 Mo. 617.

Number of judges for court en banc

(1) Where court is acting in banc, as many of the judges thereof as may be available ought to sit.—In re Bright's Contested Election, 141 A. 254, 292 Pa. 389.—In re McCormick's Contested Election, 126 A. 568, 281 Pa. 281.

(2) But a majority is sufficient to constitute a "quorum."—Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. People, 190 P. 518, 68 Colo. 487.

(3) And, since a court en banc is properly constituted if a majority of available judges take part, the absence of the trial judge from the argument of a motion for a new trial does not prevent the court from acting on such motion when composed of two other judges who constitute a majority.—Frank v. Bayuk, 185 A. 705, 322 Pa. 282.

a. In General

Except where constitutional or statutory provisions require the concurrence of a designated number of judges for adjudication, the concurrence of a majority of the judges sitting is necessary and sufficient.

Constitutional or statutory provisions requiring that a designated number of judges shall concur in an opinion in order that there may be a valid and binding adjudication by the court,²⁹ or in order that a statute be declared unconstitutional,³⁰ must, of course, be complied with. The general rule, however, unless the law provides otherwise, is that a concurrence of a majority of the judges sitting is necessary³¹ and that a concurrence of a majority

Federal constitution not violated

Provision of a state constitution that all but one of judges of state supreme court must concur to hold law unconstitutional held not violative of federal constitution.—State of Ohio ex rel. Bryant v. Akron Metropolitan Park Dist. for Summit County, 50 S.Ct. 228, 281 U.S. 74, 74 L.Ed. 710, 66 A.L.R. 1460, affirming *State ex rel. Bryant v. of the judges sitting is sufficient,³² although those concurring are not a majority of all the judges of the court.³³

Where the necessary number have concurred in an opinion, the decision rendered is the decision of the court,³⁴ at least on the points as to which the required number have concurred,³⁵ although not on points as to which fewer have concurred.³⁶ A change in the personnel will not warrant a reopening of the controversy unless the court itself orders a reargument.³⁷

The calling in of additional judges may be authorized where the court is divided,³⁸ with the additional requirement, under some decisions, that two of the justices so desire³⁹ or that the question be a constitutional one.⁴⁰

b. Where Court Equally Divided

In the absence of a statute having a different effect, full relief cannot be granted by an equally divided court, and the subject matter with which such court is dealing remains in statu quo.

Where, upon the question whether relief should be granted or refused, the judges constituting the court are equally divided in opinion, full relief cannot be granted,⁴¹ and the subject matter with which

Assent to entry of judgment

Where only two judges of a court of three are present at the court when a decision is made, a judgment in the case from which one of the two dissents is not made effective by his assent to the entry thereof; nor is such judgment made effective by the fact that another judge who was present at the hearing but absent at the time of decision previously indicated his conclusion by a statement in writing.—In re Kings County El. a. Decisions as Precedents in General

A "precedent" has been defined as a decision considered as authority for a similar case afterward arising on a similar question of law; but a precedent, sufficient to protect rights and which must be followed in similar cases, usually requires a series of decisions declaratory of common-law or equitable principles.

A "precedent," within the rule, stated infra § 187, requiring an established precedent to be followed in similar cases, has been defined as an adjudged case or decision of a court of justice, considered as furnishing an example or authority for an identical or similar case afterward arising on a similar question of law.⁴⁸ However, to establish a precedent sufficiently authoritative to protect rights acquired during its continuance, it is usually required, in case of decisions declaratory of the common law or of general equitable principles, that there be a series of decisions.⁴⁹

In the absence of a decision by a court whose judgment is authoritative on a court trying a case, a judge must exercise his best judgment on legal questions submitted to him in accordance with his

Ruling by one judge excluding other

An entry of a judgment by one of two judges over the other's protest does not constitute a judgment, since what is ordered and adjudged by the court, not merely what is entered, constitutes the judgment; and a judgment so entered by the president judge of a court over the protest of the associate judge is not binding, even though a prior ruling by the former excluding the latter from the hearing remained unreversed.—Summers v. Kramer, 114 A. 525, 271 Pa. 189.

State*, 135 So. 206, 207, 160 Miss. 494.

own views, although other courts have reached a contrary conclusion.⁵⁰ A claim set up by cross bill in equity is governed by decisions as to a similar demand at law.⁵¹ A decision rendered by an unconstitutional tribunal has no value as a precedent.⁵²

Declarations as to public policy or future rulings.

In the absence of statute, a judicial declaration of public policy is equal in force and effect to a statute, and should be followed by the court.⁵³ A decision of the appellate court, declaring that the giving of a certain instruction, which has several times been criticized by that court, will in the future be ground for a reversal is not applicable to a case previously tried, and does not constitute ground for reversal of such case on an appeal subsequently heard.⁵⁴

"Unofficial" opinions. It has been considered that the opinions of the commissioners of the supreme court designated as "unofficial" have no value as precedent or authority in the sense in which the doctrine of stare decisis is applied,⁵⁵ even though the conclusion reached is approved and the recommendation adopted.⁵⁶

Unreported decisions. The fact that a decision is not reported does not impair its effect as to questions distinctly raised and decided,⁵⁷ but there is authority to the contrary.⁵⁸ An unreported decision affirming an erroneous decision without an opinion will not be followed under the rule of stare decisis.⁵⁹

b. Extending Scope of Decisions

In applying the rule of stare decisis the courts are generally not required to extend the scope of the previous decisions.

In applying the rule of stare decisis, it is not incumbent on the court to extend the scope of previous decisions on constitutional questions,⁶⁰ especially where it is convinced that error in principle might supervene.⁶¹ Neither will a doubtful doctrine be extended by resort to analogy.⁶² So, also, although a court adopts a rule established by a line of decisions on a given question, it does not necessarily follow that it must carry such rule to its logical results where the parties occupy different relations to the subject matter and to each other.⁶³

Property outside and inside state

Where United States supreme court has held that real estate outside the state, although equitably converted, could not, under Const.U.S.Amendm. 14, be considered in fixing inheritance tax, state court may refuse to follow logic of such decision as to property within the state.—Commonwealth v. Presbyterian Hospital in Philadelphia, 134 A. 427, 287 Pa. 49.

ed to implications from what was decided in a former case,⁶⁴ but it has also been held that effect must be given to the implications contained in the decision of a higher court,⁶⁵ and that the premises implicit in a holding are as authoritative as the holding itself.⁶⁶ The court will indulge the presumption that a rule previously announced, and unchanged by the legislature, continues and expresses the policy of the state,⁶⁷ unless and until it is expressly, or by necessary implication, overruled.⁶⁸

c. Decision without Full Argument of Point

A decision is, generally, not a precedent as to a point which was not sufficiently argued and presented to the court, although if the point was an essential one the fact that it was duly presented and considered may be presumed. An affirmance without an opinion is not an approval of the opinion of the lower court; and an affirmance by consent of parties creates no binding precedent.

If a point is essential to the decision rendered, it will be presumed that it was duly considered, and that all that could be urged for or against it was presented to the court;⁶⁹ but, if it appears from the report of the case that it was not taken or inquired into at all, there is no ground for this presumption, and the authority of the case is proportionately weakened.⁷⁰ Where it is the settled practice of a court that a judgment will not be reversed for errors not argued in the briefs of counsel, a decision affirming a judgment does not become a precedent as to any question not argued or expressly presented to the court, and left unnoticed in the opinion, although it might have been raised, and, if raised, have been decisive of the case,⁷¹ and even though a question may not have been fully argued, yet it cannot be said that the decision thereon is obiter dictum, where the question was directly involved in the issues and the mind of the court was directly drawn to, and distinctly expressed on, the subject.⁷² Neither can an inferior court decide adversely to a decision of a court of last resort and send the case up to that court again on the ground that, in the former decision of the court of last resort, certain points were not sufficiently argued or noticed by the justice delivering the opinion there.⁷³ It has been held that a decision entered pro forma, without argument or consideration and solely to hasten the determination of the question by the court of appeals, will not be regarded as binding.⁷⁴

An affirmance of a judgment of a lower court is not an approval of the ruling of such court on the trial court's instructions, where the application for a writ of error contained no assignment challenging the instruction.—Southland Greyhound Lines v. only of the point decided or result reached by the court below, and not of the opinion and the conclusions of law of the lower court, so as to establish a precedent for future action.⁷⁵

Where a judgment is affirmed by consent of the parties, the court is not committed on the question where it arises again in a subsequent action, nor is it bound by the adjudication then made, although the parties to the prior action may be bound.⁷⁶

d. Points Decided without Discussion in Opinion

An omission, in an opinion, to discuss the points decided generally does not limit the controlling effect of its decree, subsequent in point of time.

An omission in an opinion of a court of last resort does not operate as a limitation on the scope of its decree, which was subsequent in point of time, and might embrace matters not discussed or referred to in the opinion, the decree being controlling.⁷⁷ Where, however, although a decision might have been reached easily by the application of a specific principle of law, the court went to some length to decide the question on another ground, the decision is negative authority against such a principle.⁷⁸ The authority of a decision of the supreme court of the United States upholding a rule of a court is not lessened by the former court's failure to give the grounds for its decision,⁷⁹ and it is a well recognized rule that, where such court passes on a case, the question of jurisdiction has been considered and determined, although not expressly stated in the opinion.⁸⁰ So, also, where there has been a long series of uniform decisions assuming the same prin-

e. Common-Law and Civil Law Precedents

Common-law precedents, ordinarily, are not available in civil law cases, and likewise civil law precedents generally cannot be followed in common-law cases.

Common-law decisions ordinarily are not available as precedents in states and in respect of matters governed by the civil law.⁸² On the other hand, decisions based on the civil law ordinarily cannot be followed as governing authority in a state where the common law, as modified by constitutional and statutory provisions, judicial decisions, and the conditions and wants of the people, is in force.⁸³ However, precedents from the civil law have been held binding on a court of probate in the absence of precedents from the common law.⁸⁴

f. Single Decisions

A single decision, although not necessarily binding as a precedent, may be applied as such where it is not in conflict with previous decisions, is not erroneous, and has generally been acquiesced in and acted on.

The rule of stare decisis is frequently applied to a principle which has been enunciated in but a single decision,⁸⁵ which is so definite in its terms and so generally acquiesced in and acted on that it has come to be recognized as the accepted rule on a given question;⁸⁶ and this rule is particularly applicable to a decision by a court of last resort, construing a statute,⁸⁷ since, as stated infra § 214, such construction constitutes a part of the statute. A previous opinion deciding contentions identical in facts, law, and application with those in the instant case should be followed on the principle of stare decisis.⁸⁸

A single decision, however, is not necessarily binding, under the rule of stare decisis,⁸⁹ especially where it has not been cited for many years;⁹⁰ and this rule will not be applied where the decision is in conflict with prior decisions, is not supported by reason or authority, or is clearly erroneous,⁹¹ or will interfere with important public or private rights.⁹² For a number of reasons a single decision will not have the same compelling force as an authoritative precedent which would attach to a series of decisions in which the same principle was asserted.⁹³ A case simply establishing a point, without in any way interfering with or contradicting any previous case, will have more weight than one which is in conflict with previous decisions or dicta.⁹⁴

§ 187. The Stare Decisis Rule

Under the stare decisis rule, a principle of law which has become settled by a series of decisions generally is binding on the courts and should be followed in similar cases. This rule is based on expediency and public policy, and, although generally it should be strictly adhered to by the courts, it is not universally applicable.

As stated in Corpus Juris, which has been cited and quoted with approval, it is a well established general rule that, where a principle of law has become settled by a series of decisions, it is binding on the courts and should be followed, in similar cases,⁹⁵ or, as otherwise expressed, the principle so settled forms a precedent for the guidance of the

Reexamination of question involved

Where a question involving important public or private rights extending through all coming time has been passed on on a single occasion, and the decision can in no just sense be said to have been acquiesced in, it is not only the right but the duty of the courts, when properly called on, to reexamine the questions involved and again subject them to judicial scrutiny.—*Commonwealth ex rel. This rule, which has been stated, infra § 193, to be merely an application of the doctrine of estoppel to court decisions, and which is usually known and referred to as the rule of stare decisis, is founded largely on considerations of expediency and sound principles of public policy, to preserve the harmony

It is a salutary rule, entitled to great weight, and ordinarily should be strictly adhered to by the courts,³ especially where a different ruling would

Stated in its general and simplest terms, the doctrine of stare decisis expresses the policy of the courts to stand by precedents and not to disturb settled points.—Neff v. George, 4 N.E.2d 388, 364 Ill. 306.

Precedents which cannot be distinguished should be followed until modified or overruled.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Ross, C.C.A.Tenn., 30 F.2d 80, certiorari denied 49 S. Ct. 348, 279 U.S. 852, 73 L.Ed. 995. Necessity for similarity of facts see infra § 210.

Recent case

Fact that prior case was quite recent would not render the doctrine of stare decisis inapplicable on ground that the case could be disregarded without serious disturbance to the body of the law.—State v. Dixon, 1 S.E.2d 521, 215 N.C. 161.

work injustice to some of the litigants.⁴ The courts are slow to interfere with the principle announced by the decision, and it may be upheld, even though they would decide otherwise were the question a new one,⁵ or equitable considerations might suggest a different result,⁶ and although it has been erroneously applied in a particular case.⁷ In determining a case the court is not concerned with what the law ought to be, but its sole function is to declare what the law, applicable to the facts of the case, is.⁸ A fortiori courts will not depart from an established rule of law to meet a particular case of supposed hardship.⁹

It applies with greater force in the case of private affairs, where contractual and property rights have grown up in reliance on the original decision, but it is nevertheless of importance in questions where the rights of the public, as a whole, are concerned.¹¹

Not universally applicable. The stare decisis rule is not universally applicable to all situations without exception, and has more or less force, according to the nature of the question decided;¹² and the rule will not be applied to the extent of perpetuating error, as stated infra § 193, or where there is some other good reason for departing therefrom.¹³ Furthermore, the rule is applicable only where the rule of law does not conflict with pertinent constitutional or statutory provisions to the contrary,¹⁴ or with decisions in which such provisions have been called to the attention of the court.¹⁵

The doctrine of "stare decisis" attaches great weight to decisions which have invited those who administer governmental affairs to depend on them as correct expositions of the law, and which likewise incline those who deal with governmental bodies to determine their demands and course of action on the decisions already announced.—Noonan v. City of Portland, Or., 88 P.2d 808.

Decisions affecting taxation are particularly within the application of stare decisis, since stability of interpretation is signally desirable in matters relating to taxation.—Welch v. Robinson, 97 N.E. 893, 211 Mass. 178.

the latter relates to legal principles only; and also in that the former binds parties and privies, whereas the latter governs a decision on the same question between strangers to the record.

A statement often met with in discussions of the law of res judicata is, in effect, that the judgment operates between parties and privies as a conclusive adjudication of all questions, both of law and of fact, determined by the court;¹⁶ and this is undoubtedly true of "estoppel by judgment," as explained in the C.J.S. title Judgments § 593, also 34 C.J. p 745 note 83—p 746 note 87, where the former adjudication is not void, no matter how erroneous or irregular it may be.¹⁷ Where, however, the former adjudication, invoked as a bar or estoppel, is a decision on a point of law, as, for example, the construction or constitutionality of a statute, the law of res judicata trenches on that of precedent or stare decisis;¹⁸ and, although both doctrines have in view the final termination of controversial questions of fact and of law,¹⁹ they are distinct and rest on entirely different grounds.²⁰ Res judicata relates to the conclusiveness of prior judicial findings or adjudications, whereas stare decisis relates to the binding effect of the legal principles involved;²¹ and res judicata binds parties and privies, whereas stare decisis governs the decision of the same question in the same way in an action between strangers to the record.²²

Some authorities have held that the law of res judicata applies to decisions on points of law, as well where the estoppel is by verdict as where it is by judgment;²³ but on the other hand, the law of stare decisis and not that of res judicata has been held to apply to findings on questions of law, where the estoppel is by verdict.²⁴

§ 189. Concurrence of Judges

- a. In general
- b. Several opinions delivered
- c. Decisions by divided court
- d. Unanimous decisions

a. In General

A decision concurred in as to the result only, by a majority of the court, is not within the rule of stare decisis, although it is entitled to consideration as to the views of the judge writing the opinion. A general concurrence in an opinion is a concurrence in all points discussed in the opinion, unless the concurrence shows that it is on a particular ground only.

Other statements of distinction

"Res judicata" constitutes a plea in bar, founded on a specific judgment determinative of a specific controversy, whereas stare decisis is merely a rule of precedent.—U. S. v. Certain Bottles of Lee's "Save the Baby", D.C.Conn., 37 F.2d 137.

"When res adjudicata is applicable, every essential fact, proved or unproved, as well as the ultimate fact found, must be treated as established, when pertinent for consideration in a later suit between the same parties; whereas stare decisis simply declares that, for the sake of certainty, a conclusion reached in one case should be applied to those which follow, if the facts are substantially the same."—Heisler v. Thomas Colliery Co., 118 A. 394, 395, 274 Pa. 448, 24 A.L.R. 1215, affirmed 43 S. Ct. 83, 260 U.S. 245, 67 L.Ed. 237.

he result, the principles enunciated in the opinion cannot be considered as within the rule of stare decisis,²⁵ although they are entitled to consideration as the views of the judge writing the opinion.²⁶ A decision rendered on a summary application to a single member of the court, although concurred in by the other members of the court, is not binding as a precedent for the guidance of the court, although it may be looked to for its persuasive effect.²⁷ Where, however, judges in the minority on one question concur in an opinion of one of the majority on another question, the principles as established therein with relation to the latter question may be considered as the settled law of the court.²⁸

A general concurrence in an opinion delivered by one member of the court indicates that the concurring judges agreed with him on all the points discussed in his opinion,²⁹ unless it appears that the concurrence was on a particular ground.³⁰

b. Several Opinions Delivered

Concurrence in several opinions, all arriving at the same general result, establishes a precedent only where the decision shows an agreement by a majority of the court on the particular question or questions constituting the ground of the decision.

Where a court consists of several judges, two or more of whom deliver opinions, and all arrive at the same general result in the cause, but for different reasons, and the rest of the judges give a silent vote of concurrence with them, in a decision for the one party or the other, then, as it does not appear that a majority of the court agreed as to any one question in particular as the ground of the decision, the case cannot be considered as authority on any of the questions which arise in the cause.³¹ Where, however, several questions arise in the cause and the opinions delivered agree in regard to all of them, and the other members of the court give a silent vote of concurrence, then all the questions will be deemed to have been determined by a majority of the court, and the case will be regarded and respected as an authoritative adjudication of all such questions.³² The views expressed in a separate concurring opinion of an individual judge are those of the court and a controlling authority, only where a majority of the court concur therein.³³

c. Decisions by Divided Court

A decision affirmed merely by reason of an equal division of the appellate court is not binding as a precedent; but a deliberate decision of the court of last resort, although by a divided court, must be considered as stare decisis on the questions involved.

A prior case, decided by a closely divided court, is authority only for its own facts.³⁴ Where the judgment of a lower court is affirmed by operation of law, by reason of an equal division of opinion in the appellate court, the judgment, while binding in the particular case as fully as a decision rendered by a unanimous court, is not binding as a precedent, and, when the same question arises in a subsequent case between other parties, it is treated as an open one and the former decision is not to be invoked as stare decisis;³⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.³⁶ Even though the court was not equally divided, it seems to be generally considered that the principles established by a decision rendered by a majority of the judges sitting will be more readily reconsidered than if there had been unanimous concurrence in the prior decision.³⁷

On appeal by a revenue agent in his proceeding to back-assess and subject to taxation by a city the capital stock of a corporation, a decision of the supreme court rendered in a like proceeding between the same parties involving the same questions, which decision was an affirmance only on account of a divided court, is a judicial precedent, and should be followed unless and until overruled.—*Robertson v. Nevertheless as stated in Corpus Juris, which has been quoted and cited with approval, a deliberate decision of the highest court of a state, although pronounced by a divided court, must be considered as stare decisis on the questions involved,³⁸ unless and until it is overruled or reversed, as explained infra § 197; and the same rule has been applied to a decision by a court of intermediate appeal.³⁹ Indeed it has been said that a dissenting opinion strengthens the authority of a case, within the jurisdiction where its decisions are binding as precedents, by reason of the fact that it shows that the case has been thoroughly considered,⁴⁰ although in other states, where the decision is merely persuasive, as explained infra §§ 204, 205, it weakens the force of the decision.⁴¹

Ordinarily, only an opinion which is concurred in by at least a majority of the court of last resort constitutes a precedent;⁴² if fewer than the majority concur there is no ruling opinion except as to the disposition of the case.⁴³ That some of the members of the court are not present or do not participate therein does not affect the force of a majority opinion as a precedent.⁴⁴

d. Unanimous Decisions

A unanimous decision is a precedent which must be followed in subsequent similar cases; and, under statutes, such a decision, unless reversed or overruled, prevails over a later unanimous decision, and also over a decision by fewer than all the judges.

The unanimous decision of a court on a question of law is a precedent which must be followed in subsequent cases in which the same question is raised on the same state of facts,⁴⁵ regardless of the individual opinions of the present members of the court,⁴⁶ unless and until it has been reversed or overruled by a like unanimous decision;⁴⁷ and under some statutes such a decision cannot be overruled or materially modified except by a like unanimous concurrence.⁴⁸ Under some statutes, unless a decision of the highest court is unanimous, it is not binding as authority on the court.⁴⁹ It has been held, however, that a statute providing that unanimous decisions by a full court shall never be reversed, overruled, or changed, but shall have the same effect as if they had been enacted in terms by the legislature, can operate prospectively only, so that decisions rendered prior to the enactment of such statute have the force of statutes not from the time when they were made, but only from the time of the enactment of the statute.⁵⁰

In view of a statute that a unanimous decision can be reversed or overruled only by a like decision, in case of conflict, a unanimous decision, which has not been so reversed or overruled, takes precedence as authority over a later unanimous decision,⁵¹ and particularly over a later decision not concurred in by all the justices.⁵² In case of a conflict between a decision rendered by all the judges constituting a court and another decision rendered by the court when less than all the judges were sitting, the decision rendered by all the judges will prevail.⁵³

a. In General

Dictum is an expression or statement by the court on a matter not necessarily involved in the case nor necessary to a decision thereof. It is entitled to consideration as being persuasive, but, as a general rule, is not binding as authority or precedent within the rule of stare decisis.

A dictum is an opinion expressed by a court, but which, not being necessarily involved in the case, lacks the force of an adjudication;⁵⁴ an opinion ex-court from which such expression emanated,⁶¹ no matter how often it may be repeated.⁶² This general rule is particularly applicable where there are prior decisions to the contrary of the statement regarded as dictum;⁶³ where the statement is declared, on a rehearing, to be dictum;⁶⁴ where the dictum is on a question which the court expressly states that it does not decide;⁶⁵ or where it is contrary to statute and would produce an inequitable result.⁶⁶ It has also been held that a dictum is not the "law of the case,"⁶⁷ nor res judicata.⁶⁸

A general expression or discussion in the court's opinion is to be taken in connection with the case in which it is used, as explained infra § 222, and, in accordance with the foregoing general rule if such expression or discussion goes beyond the case in which it is used, it is dicta binding on no one, and is not controlling in a subsequent case in which the same question is presented for decision.⁶⁹ A state-

Reason for rule

"In view of the fact that the duty of the court is to construe the law as it exists, in cases brought within its jurisdiction . . . it would be unfair to the judge as well as to future litigants to give permanent and controlling effect to casual statements outside the scope of the real inquiry."—Rauch v. "In so far as an opinion announces principles as a basis for the decision, it is in no sense dictum."—Taylor v. Taylor, 40 S.W.2d 393, 395, 162 Tenn. 482.

Court's holding in distinguishing a case on the authority of which one of the parties was insisting on a result different from that reached in the opinion is a part of the actual decision, and not merely obiter dictum.—State ex rel. McNulty v. Ellison, 210 S.W. 381, 278 Mo. 42.

Disposal of law and fact

The decision of a case on the law is not obiter dicta, although the case is also disposed of as a matter of tions, although only incidentally involved, which are presented and decided in the regular course of the consideration of the case, and lead up to the final conclusion,⁸³ and to any statement in the opinion as to a matter on which the decision is predicated.⁸⁴ Accordingly, a point expressly decided does not lose its value as a precedent because the disposition of the case is⁸⁵ or might have been⁸⁶ made on some other ground, or even though, by reason of other points in the case, the result reached might have been the same if the court had held, on the particular point, otherwise than it did.⁸⁷ A decision on which the case could have turned is not regarded as obiter dictum merely because, owing to the disposal of that contention, it was necessary to consider another question,⁸⁸ nor can an additional reason for a decision, brought forward after the case has been disposed of on one ground, be regarded as dicta.⁸⁹ So, also, where a case presents two or more points, any one of which is sufficient to determine the ultimate issue, but the court actually decides all such points, the case is an authoritative precedent as to every point decided, and none of such points can be regarded as having merely the status of a dictum,⁹⁰

The decision of a point made in argument is not an adjudication of the question involved unless by the pleadings it is or should have been made an issue.—State v. Des Moines City R. Co., 140 N.W. 437, 159 Iowa 257.

and one point should not be denied authority merely because another point was more dwelt on and more fully argued and considered;⁹¹ nor does a decision on one proposition make statements of the court regarding other propositions dicta.⁹² However, expressions of opinion as to the construction of a statute, if such expressions are not necessary for the rendering of the decision in question, do not constitute judicial determinations of the true construction of the statute.⁹³

Inferior tribunals bound. Inferior tribunals are bound by the conclusions of the court of last resort, and cannot treat them as dicta on the theory that the questions determined were not properly raised by the record and were not necessary to the determination of the case;⁹⁴ and, in the absence of decisions to the contrary, dicta of a court of last resort, or other higher court, should be considered by inferior courts on the same matter.⁹⁵ It has been held that an inferior court is controlled, in deciding a particular question, by the dictum of a court of last resort, as to what decision it would make if the question came before it.⁹⁶

c. Judicial Dicta

An expression of opinion on a point involved in a case, argued by counsel and deliberately passed on by the court, although not essential to the disposition of the case, if dictum, is a judicial dictum.

As stated in Corpus Juris, which has been quoted and cited with approval, an expression of opinion on a point involved in a case, argued by counsel and deliberately passed on by the court, although not essential to the disposition of the case, if a dictum, should be considered a judicial dictum as distinguished from a mere obiter dictum, which is an expression originating alone with the judge writing the opinion, as an argument or illustration.⁹⁷ A fortiori, an expression which might otherwise be

Where two independent reasons are given for a decision, neither one is to be considered mere dictum, since there is no more reason for calling one ground the real basis of the decision than the other. Constitutionality

Expressions of opinion as to the construction of statutes in decisions passing on their constitutionality do not constitute judicial determinations of the true construction of the statute where there was no holding that the statute would be constitutional if given one construction and unconstitutional if given another, especially where the holding was that the statute was constitutional even if construed as claimed.—*Marion v. Federal courts

A district court in determining the constitutionality of a statute may be bound by doctrine of stare decisis as evidenced by decisions of United States supreme court and the circuit court of appeals, and, where either court has not passed on point in controversy, district court may consider pertinent obiter dicta in their opinions.—*Acme, Inc. v. regarded as dictum becomes an authoritative statement when it is expressly declared by the court to be announced as a guide for future conduct.⁹⁸ A statement of a rule of practice, by an appellate court, for the guidance of the courts of first instance and of the bar is not obiter dictum,⁹⁹ and this also applies to statements disclosing the logic which induced the court to lay down a rule, and which were intended to enunciate general principles to be regarded as settled.¹ It has been held, however, that the court has no power to declare, for the government of future cases, principles or rules of law which cannot affect the result as to the thing in issue in the case before it;² and that the fact that a higher court has condemned a certain practice is no authority for reversing a case by an intermediate court for such practice, unless and until the higher court has reversed a cause for that reason.³

A judicial dictum is entitled to much weight, and should be followed unless found to be erroneous.⁴

d. Dicta as Rule of Law

Dicta frequently repeated and approved may acquire thereby strength and importance as precedents.

Dicta, while not binding in themselves, may become finally a part of the recognized law of the land. It is within the power of a higher appellate court to make precedents where there are none to the contrary, and to this end it may adopt obiter rulings which appear to it to be legally sound.⁵ Even though dicta have not the merit of having regarded legal principles accurately, yet, having by frequent repetition and approval obtained a familiar place in the current decisions, they may ultimately be clothed with the same, or substantially the same, strength and importance attached to precedents,⁶

Construction of statute

When a court of last resort carefully reviews specific provisions of a statute and declares its interpretation thereof, such construction is judicial dictum and not mere obiter dictum and it is the duty of a court of first instance to follow such construction to the fullest extent, even though not strictly necessary to the decision of the case in which it was laid down by the appellate court.—In re Bell's Estate, 31 Pa.Dist. & Co. 670.

Ruling as to communication with foreman of jury

An opinion, after mature consideration, that the probable effect of the trial court's misconduct in communicating with the foreman only during the jury's deliberation, in violation of statute, is of such public concern that lack of a fair trial will be conclusively presumed and no evidence to the contrary be heard on a motion for a new trial, is binding, even if technically dicta, in view of the court's statement that the question is so important as to make a ruling appropriate, although unnecessary.—Parker v. especially where the dicta are the construction of a statute which has remained substantially the same;⁷ and it has been held that, when a construction of statutes involves a question of practice only, and has been for a number of years followed by the trial courts and indirectly approved several times on appeal, it will be followed until changed by law.⁸ So, where there is an accepted dictum of the law which has long formed the basis of contracts, and on the faith of which rights have vested, the courts will decline to overrule it.⁹ Such dicta, however, should not be permitted to overcome a long line of authorities to the contrary, unless such action is urgently impelled by highly persuasive reasons not previously considered.¹⁰

The opinion of the highest court of another state on a certain issue, although dictum, is competent evidence of the law of that state with relation to such issue.¹¹

§ 191. Matters Subsequent to Decision Affecting Force as Precedent

A decision's force as a precedent may be affected by a subsequent change in the law, a cessation of the reason for the decision, as by a change in conditions, and by other matters arising subsequent to the decision.

A rule of law established by a court of last resort, as a precedent, ordinarily cannot be changed or affected except by a controlling decision of such court.¹² In the absence of such a controlling decision, the force of a decision as a precedent under the stare decisis rule is not affected by the fact that certain justices subsequently withdraw their acquiescence in the decision¹³ or by the fact that the decision has been vigorously criticized by text writers as being out of harmony with the decisions of other states,¹⁴ or that it has not been followed generally by the legal profession and by trial judges.¹⁵

Changes in law. Where the law on a particular subject is radically changed or superseded by statute, decisions under the old law become of little value as authority.¹⁶ When, however, a statutory provision introduces no new principle, but is merely affirmative of the common law, decisions of the common law are applicable as precedents after the enactment of the statute.¹⁷ A statutory provision which is necessarily considered in a decision denying an appeal and reargument of a former decision does not destroy the effect of the former decision.¹⁸ A decision based on a statute subsequently repealed, but in substance restored by the initiative measure, does not lose its force by reason of the repeal.¹⁹

Cessation of reason for former decision. The courts may properly refuse to follow precedents where the reasons on which such precedents were "Dicta cited with approval in a case in which the question is involved, cease to be dicta."—Binford v. Carline, 8 Tenn.App. 364, 368.

Obiter dicta as to a fundamental right in the case, sound in principle, and unanimously adopted by an appellate court, will be adhered to unless and until a contrary rule is announced by a higher court.—Southern Ry. Co. v. City of Greenwood, D.C.S.C., 40 F.2d 679.

Dicta recognizing absolute character of privileged publication in a judicial proceeding, which has also been recognized in other cases, has some persuasive, if not authoritative, force.—Donnell v. Linforth, 52 P.2d 937, 11 Cal.App.2d 25.

Dicta must be right, in order to be valuable.—Buchner v. Chicago, M. & N.W. R. Co., 19 N.W. 56, 60 Wis. 264. Decisions constituting rules of property see supra § 216.

United States supreme court's construction of a statute, although obiter dicta, and its repeated affirmation by the same court, also dicta, must be taken as giving to it the weight of a settled conclusion of law, that is, a construction of the statute which is binding on a district court.—Arrigo v. Commonwealth Casualty Co., D.C.Md., 41 F.2d 817.

Validity of statute

That the validity and binding force of a statute have been long acquiesced in and recognized by dicta in judicial decisions furnishes an almost irresistible reason for not overturning it.—Ex parte Garner, 177 P. 162, 179 Cal. 409.

Not accepted in other jurisdictions

Rule of law established by court decisions of state and founded in sound reason cannot be changed by court because perhaps not accepted in other jurisdictions.—Bastedo v. Frailey, 162 A. 621, 109 N.J.Law 390, 87 A.L.R. 587.

based no longer exist,²⁰ as where they are based on differences and distinctions which have been destroyed by a later judicial decision or by statute.²¹ However, the application of old principles to new conditions or changed facts does not offend the rule of stare decisis,²² although prior decisions need not be followed where it cannot be done consistently with the traditional policy of the courts to adapt the law to the economic and social needs of the times.²³ A rule of law, which has its origin in the decisions of the court, may be changed by the courts in the light of experience, and should be changed when the justice of the cause resulting from changed conditions so requires,²⁴ unless the rule has become fixed by constitutional or statutory provision.²⁵

Subsequent judicial observations on decision. It has been stated that in the consideration of the doctrine of stare decisis the interpretation is to be broader than that generally given to decisions, or rather the effect of prior decisions is more comprehensive and wider reaching,²⁶ and not only are actual decisions followed, but it is even claimed that any subsequent allegation as to what is determined in any case is to be respected, so that not only the particular case but any subsequent interpretation or explanation of its meaning is to be regarded as coming within the doctrine and final.²⁷ A decision rendered in obedience to a ruling of the supreme court of the United States, as then understood, is not conclusive where such court subsequently places a contrary construction on its former holding.²⁸

Lapse of time. A deliberate decision does not lose its authority as a precedent by lapse of time alone, and it is not necessary for the court to reiterate the doctrine from time to time to keep it in force,²⁹ but it has been said to be a significant factor in determining the weight of a decision that, in a long period of years from the date of its rendition, it has never been referred to in the jurisdiction where it was rendered.³⁰ On the other hand, it is considered that an additional reason for refusing to change a rule established by a decision of courts is found in the fact that it has been adhered to for many years;³¹ and a decision, repeatedly followed and not questioned will not be construed as altered by later cases, although they contain implications at variance therewith.³²

Change of organization of court. Where a court is abolished or reorganized and succeeded by a new court which is in fact a continuation of the former court, the decisions of such former court are generally followed in the application of the principle of stare decisis, except where such decisions are manifestly erroneous.³³ A fortiori a change in the personnel of a court affords no ground for reopening a question which it has once authoritatively settled.³⁴

Effect of appeal. The fact that an appeal has been taken from the court of last resort of a state to the supreme court of the United States does not release the state courts from the obligation of following such decision, as it remains the law until it is reversed;³⁵ and a decision of the supreme court of the United States putting its affirmance of the decree of the state appellate court on a ground different from that taken by the state court in its opinion does not affect the binding authority of the decision of the state court as a judicial precedent on the question covered.³⁶ It has been held not improper for the court of civil appeals of a state to cite a decision of that court as a precedent, although a writ of error on such decision is pending and undetermined in the state supreme court;³⁷ but, on the other hand, it has been held that an opinion of an intermediate appellate court cannot be relied on as authority, where the case has been transferred to a higher court for a further hearing.³⁸ The refusal of a writ of error by a court of last resort cannot override a subsequent express decision of the same question in an opinion of such court.³⁹

Effect of grant of rehearing. A decision in which a rehearing is granted is not authority, where, before any hearing or further decision is rendered in banc, the proceeding is dismissed on motion.⁴⁰ It has also been held that even pending an application for a rehearing, a case cannot be relied on or cited as authority, as such an application suspends the judgment;⁴¹ and also that as the authority of an opinion is nullified by the granting of a petition for a rehearing, such opinion is not an authority with respect to questions decided therein,⁴² even though they were not referred to or discussed in the second opinion on the rehearing.⁴³ On the other hand, it has been considered that, where a rehearing is granted on one ground but denied on the other, the decision as to the latter is binding as a precedent.⁴⁴ against prior decisions and should be followed in determining the same question.

According to some decisions, where conflicting decisions have already been made by inadvertence or otherwise, and the position of the court is therefore uncertain, the rule of stare decisis does not apply,⁴⁵ and in such event, it has been held that it is the duty of the court to follow the decision which it conceives is based on the sounder reasoning.⁴⁶ By the weight of authority, however, it is generally considered that in case of a conflict the last expression of the court is controlling as against prior opinions.⁴⁷ In case of a conflict between decisions on a contract relation and decisions in ex delicto cases, arising out of such relation, in a case of the latter character the decisions in such cases should be followed.⁴⁸

Under some statutory provisions, unless an earlier decision has been overruled or materially modified, in the manner provided by statute, it is superior in authority to later decisions to the contrary and should be given first consideration in determining a question.⁴⁹ If a question has been decided expressly in an earlier case which has never been modified or questioned, the mere fact that the reasoning of the few later cases involving somewhat similar but really different questions seems to indicate a change of view affords no justification for a departure from the rule laid down in the earlier decision.⁵⁰ An earlier decision which harmonizes with the great weight of authority must prevail, and that part of a later decision which is not in harmony with the weight of authority both in the federal and state courts must be overruled.⁵¹

In inferior courts. So far as inferior courts are concerned, it is their duty to follow the latest decision of the court of last resort, or higher appellate court, regardless of whether or not it is in harmony with earlier decisions of that court.⁵² This rule applies where a later decision of a coordinate appellate court is affirmed by the court of last resort.⁵³ So, also, where pending a rehearing in a court of intermediate appeals the court of last resort decides the question otherwise than was decided by the court of intermediate appeals, it is the duty of the latter court on the rehearing to follow the decision of the highest court and overrule its own decision,⁵⁴ and if, in the interval between a first and second appeal to an intermediate court, the court of last resort rules on the question involved, such ruling should be followed on the second appeal.⁵⁵ Where, however, the inferior court has rendered a final decree settling the rights of the parties in accordance with the latest decision of the court of last resort, and its judgment has been af-

Previous decisions should not be followed to the extent that grievous wrong may result; and, accordingly, the courts ordinarily will not adhere to a rule or principle established by previous decisions which they are convinced is erroneous.

Rights accruing while overruled decision in force

Under a constitutional provision to the effect that the last previous ruling of the supreme court on any question of law or equity is controlling on the inferior courts, an inferior court must follow the latest decision of the court of last resort even in dealing with rights which accrued while the overruled decision was still in force.—Sedalia v. Clerical misprision Errors in an opinion amounting to mere clerical misprision and not affecting the result reached do not destroy effect of decision as a precedent.—Davis v. Davis' Estate, 185 P. 559, 56 Mont. 500.

Jury errors

Although the doctrine of stare decisis is applicable to judicial decisions which may be viewed as judicial errors, it does not hold as to jury errors.—Gross Coal Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 175 N.W. 793, 170 Wis. 467.

Merely to restore the harmony and symmetry of the law is not a sufficient reason to overthrow a doctrine which has, through a series of decisions, come to be regarded universally as fixed and settled. In such case the court may, however, with propriety circumscribe the anomalous doctrine within as narrow limits as possible.—Judson v. Gray, 11 N.Y. 408.

A mere doubt as to the correctness of former decisions is not sufficient ground for overruling them.—State v. Silvers, 47 N.W. 772, 82 Iowa 714—15 C.J. p 959 note 23 [a].

Rule of court

The promulgation of a general rule by the court is a decision that the power to make such rule exists, and in a case arising under the rule, before reversing its decision sustaining it, it should appear very clearly to the court that the rule was authorized neither by law nor by the inherent powers of the court of chancery.—In re Du Pont, 68 A. 399, 8 Del.Ch. 442.

Rulings on the admissibility of documents as evidence ought to be followed, unless they are manifestly wrong, in which case they may and should be changed.—Spiegel's House Furnishing Co. v. Industrial Commission, 123 N.E. 606, 288 Ill. 422, 6 A.L.R. 540.

a rule of law not so well settled by authority as to preclude such examination, a state court of last resort will review it.⁶⁶

Power and duty to overrule or change precedent.

In the absence of constitutional restrictions, a court generally, has power, and it is its duty, to overrule or modify its former decisions which in its opinion are erroneous or wrongful,⁶⁷ although there has been no legislative change in the law as originally construed,⁶⁸ unless a rule of property or statutory or constitutional construction is involved.⁶⁹ However, if a rule of law, well established by decisions, is erroneous, it is not to be lightly set aside by the courts, but the matter of abandoning it or having it changed should be addressed to the legislature and not to the court,⁷⁰ unless the error is one which cannot be cured by the legislature.⁷¹

Decisions contrary to constitution or statute. The doctrine of stare decisis cannot be invoked to sustain, as authority, a decision which is in conflict with the provisions of the state constitution;⁷² or a decision which is in conflict with a previous statutory enactment to which the decision makes no reference, and which is made without reviewing or construing the statute,⁷³ and in such a case the stat-

Construction of insurance policy

To justify a departure from an authoritative and long-standing construction of an insurance policy previous to its delivery and acceptance, it ought to be perfectly clear not only that the construction was wrong, but also that the evils of the established principle will be more injurious to the community than can possibly result from a change of the rule.—*Home Ins. Constitutional provisions held not restrictions

(1) Constitutional provisions, vesting the judicial power of the state in the supreme court and such other courts as are provided for by the constitution, and also providing that the supreme court shall have such jurisdiction as properly belongs to a court of appeals, place no restriction on the power of the supreme court to overrule or change decisions which in its opinion are erroneous or wrongful.—Brewer v. Browning, 76 So. 519, 115 Miss. 358, L.R.A.1918F 1185, Ann.Cas.1918B 1013, overruling suggestion of error 76 So. 267, 115 Miss. 358, L.R.A.1918F 1185, Ann.Cas.1918B 1013.

(2) Constitutional provision that common law in force at time constitution was adopted should continue to be law of state does not preclude court from repudiating former holding that law of joint tenancies in personal property governed savings account or bank certificate payable to two persons or survivor and holding law of contracts applicable where at time Constitution was adopted there was no common law applicable to such cases.—*Schwanke v. ute should be followed rather than the decision.⁷⁴

Similarity to estoppel. It has been considered that the rule of stare decisis, stated in simple form and considered with relation to its effect on private affairs, is really nothing more than the application of the doctrine of estoppel to court decisions,⁷⁵ and accordingly, giving the doctrine what might be called a personal application, it cannot be relied on by a party who has not in good faith been deceived by the decision under which he claims to have acted;⁷⁶ and when it appears that a party was not misled to his prejudice by a reliance on a decision that the court rendering such decision has subsequently concluded was erroneous, the court will not feel estopped to overrule it by reason of the insistence of the party claiming to have acted under it that such overruling would overturn contracts and engagements which he had entered into on the faith of such decision.⁷⁷

Transfer of stock as subject to taxation

A decision of the supreme court of the United States overruling a former decision and determining that a testamentary transfer of stock is subject to taxation in the state of the owner's domicile rather than in state of the domicile of the corporation which issued the stock is controlling as to taxes which accrued or were paid before date of latter decision as well as to taxes which state has attempted to levy and collect subsequent to that date.—O'Malley v. Sims, 75 P.2d 50, 51 Ariz. 155, 115 A.L.R. 634.

§ 194. Effect of Reversal or Overruling of Earlier Decisions

- a. In general
- b. Exception to general rule

a. In General

The overruling of a decision generally is retrospective and makes the law at the time of the overruled decision as it is declared to be in the last decision. The overruled decision as a precedent is thereby destroyed, but it remains the law of the particular case in which it was rendered.

As a general rule, the effect of overruling a decision and refusing to abide by the precedent there laid down is retrospective, as well as prospective, and makes the law at the time of the overruled decision as it is declared to be in the last decision;⁷⁸ and in accordance with the rule stated infra § 214, that a judicial construction of a statute relates back and constitutes a part of the statute, a decision reversing or overruling a prior decision as to the construction of a statute is generally retrospective in its operation and relates back to the enactment of the statute,⁷⁹ or to the date of the overruled decision.⁸⁰ The distinction has been made that if the overruled decision is one dealing with procedural or adjective law the effect of the subsequent overruling decision is prospective only;⁸¹ but if the overruled decision is one dealing with substantive law the effect of the subsequent overruling decision is retroactive.⁸² In any event, a court of final decision may expressly define and declare the effect of a decision overruling a former decision, as to whether or not it shall be retroactive, or operate prospectively only,⁸³ and may, by a saving clause in the overruling decision, preserve all rights accrued under the previous decision.⁸⁴

The overruling decision destroys the effect of the overruled decision as a precedent,⁸⁵ and a decision which is based wholly on another decision, which is overruled, is also overruled.⁸⁶

Tax on income

(1) A decision of the federal supreme court overruling its earlier decision that income from patent royalties was not taxable by the states has been held retrospective, even though a taxpayer is compelled to pay interest at the usual legal rate for taxes withheld prior to the overruling decision; and if the tax commission has refrained from assessing certain income because of the supreme court's decision, it is not precluded from levying an assessment within the time limited subsequent to the overruling of such decision.—Laabs v. Wisconsin Tax Commission, 261 N.W. 404, 218 Wis. 414.

(2) Where, pursuant to United States supreme court decision that state could not tax income from copyrights, state tax commission did not assess tax upon income from copyrights, after supreme court reversed itself, tax commission was entitled to collect income tax upon revenue from copyright for years during which prior decision was thought to be the law.—People ex rel. Rice v. Graves, 273 N.Y.S. 582, 242 App.Div. 128, affirmed 200 N.E. 288, 270 N.Y. 498, certiorari denied 56 S.Ct. 953, 298 U.S. 683, 80 L.Ed. 1403.

Affecting property rights

Changes in judicial interpretation of statute respecting procedure affecting property rights should not be given retroactive effect.—Continental Supply Co. v. Abell, 24 P.2d 133, 95 Mont. 148.

Limitation of action

Effect of decision overruling prior decision and holding unconstitutional, statute imposing twenty day limitation for claim for compensation for taking of property for county road would be prospective and not retroactive, as dealing with matter of "procedural law."—Barker v. St. Louis County, 104 S.W.2d 371, 340 Mo. 986.

In Oklahoma the rule that court's decision construing statute operates prospectively only is inapplicable to decision construing statute affecting procedure or legal remedy; and therefore a subsequent decision holding that governmental approval and acknowledgment of will of full-blood Indian is not element of due execution and attestation, contrary to former holding, constitutes decision affecting procedure and remedy, and therefore has retroactive effect.—Coats v. Riley, 7 P.2d 644, 154 Okl. 291.

Burden of proof

Where, in an action for injuries, the instruction is based on a former incorrect rule as to burden required of plaintiff, the correct rule adopted by court after cause was tried is retroactive and applicable to that cause, since rule as to burden of proof is matter of substantive law.—Koebel v. Tieman Coal & Material Co., supra.

Constitutional rights cannot be based on the error of prior decisions.—Dunbar v. City of New York, 40 S.Ct. 250, 251 U.S. 516, 64 L.Ed. 384, affirming 119 N.E. 1039, 223 N.Y. 597, which affirms 164 N.Y.S. 519, 177 App. Div. 647.

Construction of will

The fact that a will was drawn and testator died after decision had been made by the supreme court announcing a rule of interpretation applicable thereto, and before the rendition of another decision assumed to be in conflict therewith, is not a sufficient reason for following the rule first announced rather than the later one. If the second decision is regarded as overruling the first, the accepted theory is that the first was wrong, not that a change had taken place in the law; and the first decision, being erroneous, is of no effect, unless in a situation having a bearing on testator's actual intention.—Pearson v. Orcutt, 191 P. 286, 107 Kan. 305, overruling motion for rehearing 189 P. 160, 106 Kan. 610.

Suit against state

Contractor seeking to sue state highway commission in chancery court to recover balance allegedly due for construction work done on state highways under contract with such commission could not complain because supreme court overruled its former decision, even though that decision permitted plaintiff to maintain its suit similar to present one, since no one has vested right to sue state or its agencies.—Arkansas State Highway Commission v. Nelson Bros., 87 S.W.2d 394, 191 Ark. 629.

86. Ark.—Federal Land Bank of St. Louis v. State Highway Commission, 108 S.W.2d 1077, 194 Ark. 616. La.—State v. Southern Cotton Oil Co., 113 So. 825, 164 La. 225.

A decision by one department of a court, which was vacated by an order directing a hearing by the court in banc, at which hearing a different conclusion was reached, is not binding as an authority.⁸⁷

Reliance on an erroneous decision which is afterward reversed gives no right of action;⁸⁸ and moreover, a reversal does not establish a dissenting opinion of the reversed case as the law of the case,⁸⁹ and will not restore to a litigant a right which he has, in the meantime, forfeited.⁹⁰ If a decision of a court is reversed by an appellate court and its decision is reversed by the court of last resort on such terms as to leave the question of jurisdiction in the first court doubtful, such question will not be thereby decided.⁹¹

Partial overruling or reversal. The overruling or reversal of one proposition of a decision does not argue unsoundness therein as to other separate and distinct propositions declared thereby.⁹² However, a ruling subsequently reversed in part cannot support a ruling in another court and case, made before the reversal,⁹³ but if the later ruling involves different facts and reasons it need not be reversed.⁹⁴

Overruled decision as law of case. The overruled decision remains the law of the case with respect to the particular case in which it was rendered;⁹⁵ it remains, as between the parties in the earlier litigation, a conclusive determination of questions of law and fact there litigated.⁹⁶

Criminal or penal case. The general rule as to an overruling decision being retrospective has been held to apply to the overruling of a decision in a criminal case.⁹⁷ However, with respect to the construction of criminal statutes, it has been considered that the overruling or reversal of a decision does not relate back to the date of the earlier decision for the reason that such relation back would give the statute an ex post facto operation;⁹⁸ and that one who places reliance on an unequivocal decision

Dammum absque injuria

Where highest judicial tribunal enjoins violation of statute, and a defendant is thus coerced into compliance, and no conditions are imposed on those in whose favor the decree operates as a prerequisite to obtain its benefits, damage to defendant is damnum absque injuria, although injunction is afterwards dissolved.—Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Reversal read in light of return

The supreme court's reversal of judgment dismissing corporation's complaint must be read solely in light of return indicating that lower court's decision was based on one ground that corporation could not appear personally in action before such court, although supreme court assigned other reasons than that corporation could so appear in memorandum of reversal.—A. Victor & Co. v. Sleining, 4 N.Y.S.2d 597, 167 Misc. 719, affirmed 9 N.Y.S.2d 323, 255 App.Div. 673, reargument denied 11 N.Y.S.2d 548.

Common law

Where court of last resort of a state held that certain act did not constitute a crime under the common law, and later overruled the case so holding, and held that such act did constitute a crime under the common law, the common law on the subject stands as if the first case had never been decided.—Gross v. State, 100 So. 177, 135 Miss. 624.

The decision of an inferior court cannot be relied on to justify the commission of an act alleged to be a crime, where a court of last resort subsequently makes a contrary holding.—State v. Striggles, 210 N.W. 137, 202 Iowa 1318, 49 A.L.R. 1270.

98. Miss.—State v. Longino, 67 So. 902, 109 Miss. 125, Ann.Cas.1916E 371.

Trial according to construction of overruled decision

Where a defendant was indicted for a crime under a statute under the provisions of which, as construed by a decision of the supreme court, he was not guilty of the crime with which he was charged at the time of the commission of the acts charged against him as constituting such crime, and later, by a decision of the supreme court, the former decision was overruled, defendant was entitled to be tried accord-

holding a statute unconstitutional is not liable to a penalty for a violation of such statute notwithstanding it is later declared to be constitutional.⁹⁹

Mode of overruling. A decision may be overruled directly¹ or it may be overruled impliedly,² as by a refusal to apply it.³ Where, however, the court decides a case one way, a later decision in a different case involving the same legal propositions and decided another way will not affect the first decision.⁴

b. Exception to General Rule

An overruling decision cannot operate retrospectively so as to impair the obligations of contracts entered into, or injuriously affect vested rights acquired, in reliance on the overruled decision.

The foregoing general rule as to an overruling decision having a retroactive effect is subject to the well-settled exception that the construction of the law, as given by the overruling decision, may work prospectively but will not be permitted to retroact so as to impair the obligations of contracts entered into, or injuriously affect vested rights acquired, in reliance on the earlier decision,⁵ as where contracts are made or rights acquired in reliance on the construction of a constitutional provision or statute by an earlier decision, which construction is afterward changed by an overruling decision,⁶ and ing to the construction put upon the statute by the overruled decision.—Odum v. State, 95 So. 253, 132 Miss. 3, overruling suggestion of error 94 So. 233, 130 Miss. 643.

The refusal of the supreme court to allow the trial court to enter a final decree of divorce against the will of a petitioner, after a decision that the petitioner was entitled to a divorce, will not affect final decrees of divorce in other divorce suits entered against the will of a petitioner, since such decrees are founded on error, and not on lack of jurisdiction.—*McLaughlin v. Bonds

(1) Where municipal bonds have been sold, the rights of the parties are to be determined according to the statute as it had been judicially construed, when the bonds were placed on the market, because a change in the decision would be equivalent to a change in the law itself, and giving such change a retroactive effect would impair the obligation of the contract of sale.—*Douglass v. The principle that a litigant must not be prejudiced because courts have recharted judicial course in construction of statute does not apply where court adheres to construction given statute before its amendment simply because court's attention was not called to different wording of statute after amendment.—*Fidelity Trust Co. of Houston v. a. Definition, Nature, and Distinctions

"Law of the case" is the controlling legal rule of decision, as established by a previous decision, between the same parties in the same case. It is a rule of practice, and generally is distinguishable from res judicata and stare decisis.

"Law of the case" has been defined as the opinion delivered on a former appeal.¹⁰ More specifically, it means that whatever is once irrevocably established as the controlling legal rule of decision between the same parties in the same case continues to be the law of the case, whether correct on general principles or not, so long as the facts on which such decision was predicated continue to be the facts of the case before the court.¹¹

Similar definition

The law of the case is a phrase which is used to give expression to the rule that the final judgment of the highest court on a question of law establishes the rights of the parties to that controversy, and is a final determination thereof which estops the parties afterwards from questioning its correctness.

"The doctrine of the 'law of the case' applies only to decisions of the highest court on the particular issue under consideration."—Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of California, 288 P. 775, 779, 309 Cal. 460, affirmed 51 S.Ct. 553, 283 U.S. 380, 75 L.Ed. 1128.

a rule of practice and not a principle of substantive law.¹² It expresses the practice of the courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been previously decided in the same case,¹³ and is binding on every tribunal dealing with the case except one clothed with power to overrule and finally declare the law to be otherwise.¹⁴ It is founded on public policy, in the interests of orderly judicial procedure,¹⁵ and is of special significance as applied to questions of law as distinguished from decisions on questions of fact.¹⁶

Distinguished from res judicata and stare decisis. The law of the case, res judicata, and stare decisis belong to the same family in that they have in view the termination of controverted questions of fact and law.¹⁷ The law of the case, however, is distinct from res judicata,¹⁸ in that the law of the case does not have the finality of the doctrine of res

judicata,¹⁹ and applies only to the one case, whereas res judicata forecloses parties or privies in one case by what has been done in another case,²⁰ although in its essence it is nothing more than a special and limited application of the doctrine of res judicata or former adjudication,²¹ and what is known as the "law of the case," that is, the effect and conclusiveness of a former decision in the subsequent proceedings in the same case, has been generally put upon the ground of res judicata.²²

"The law of the case" has also been held to be distinct from "stare decisis" in that it is founded on different considerations;²³ but the law of stare decisis and not that of res judicata has been held to apply to findings on questions of law, where the doctrine invoked is that of the law of the case, and the former decision did not have the requisites of a final judgment.²⁴

b. General Rule; Limitations

As a general rule, a decision by the court on a point in a case becomes the law of the case unless or until it is reversed or modified by a higher court. This rule, however, is subject to the power of the court, in a proper case, to disregard or correct its former decision; and in any event the rule applies only to a prior decision which is a binding adjudication on substantially the same facts and issues.

As stated in Corpus Juris, which has been quoted and cited with approval, as a general rule, where a court has considered and determined a point in a case, its conclusion thereon becomes the law of that case,²⁵ unless or until reversed or modified by an appellate court,²⁶ subject, of course, to the general authority of courts to vacate or set aside their judgments, as explained in the C.J.S. title Judgments § 265, also 34 C.J. p 252 note 72-p 255 note 80. Such a decision, as the law of the case, is binding on the courts,²⁷ as well as on the parties,²⁸ and even though the decision was erroneous it cannot be availed of by the litigant prejudicially affected in a subsequent trial of the same cause.²⁹ A question of law once decided ordinarily will not be reconsidered in the same case except on a motion for a rehearing.³⁰

This doctrine is most generally applied to decisions of an appellate court, and will be found treated in Appeal and Error § 1821, with regard to such decisions being the law of the case on subsequent appeals, and § 1964, with regard to such decisions being the law of the case in the lower court, and in the C.J.S. title Criminal Law § 1840, also 17 C.J. p 207 note 68-p 208 note 73, with regard to such decisions being the law of the case in criminal cases.

Limitations of rule. The general rule, however, is not inflexible.³¹ It does not constitute a limitation on the power of the court,³² which may disregard or correct a prior decision or ruling which was plainly wrong,³³ or where the application of
